

ROMAN HISTORY,

From the Removal of the Imperial Seat

BY

Constantine the Great,

To the Total Failure of

The Western Empire

IN

AUGUSTULUS,

Containing the Space of 146 Tears.

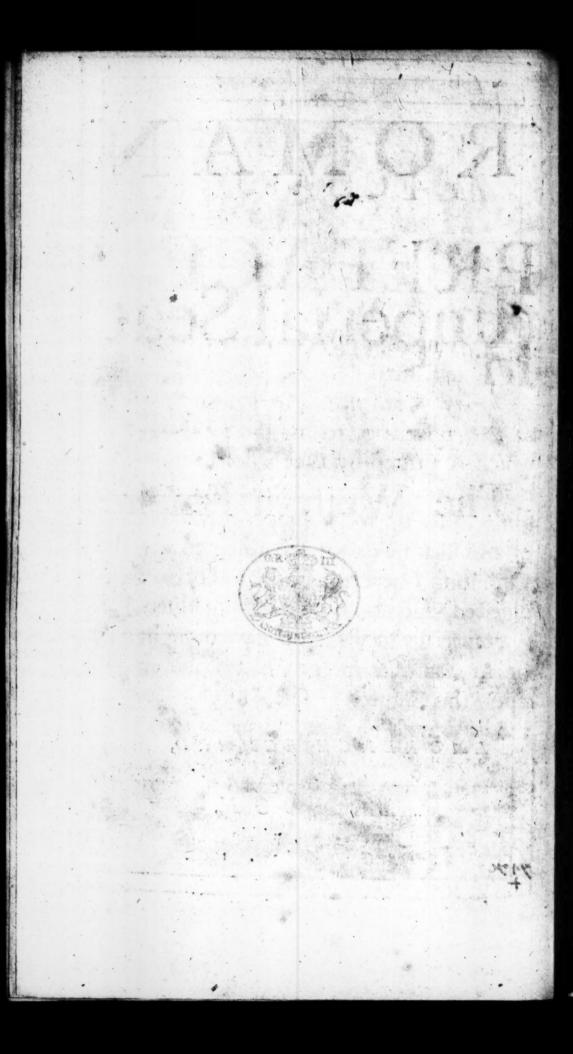

VOL. III.

The THIRD EDITION.

Revisid, with a Recommendatory PREFACE, by LAURENCE ECHARD, A. M. Being a Continuation of his History.

LONDON,

Printed for Jacob Tonfon, within Grays-Inn Gate next Grays-Inn Lane. 1706.

Mr. ECHARD's

PREFACE.

Having resolv'd not to concern my self further in the Roman History, I am desir'd to write a Line or two in Relation to this Third Volume, which is written by One whose Person is unknown to me. I dare not presume to set up for a Judge in Matters of this Nature; but according to my Opinion, I believe it to be a very well digested, useful and entertaining History; especially to all such as have thought fit to read over the two first Volumes upon this Subject. The Author's Me-thod seems to be clear and natural, his Transitions neat and illustrating, and his Reflections and Observations judicious and instructive; particularly in Page 170, 171, and the Conclusion. His

Mr. Echard's Preface.

His Stile, in the main, I take to be Grave, Manly, and proper for the Greatness of the Subject; in which there is Perspicuity without Meannels, Strength without Stiffnels, and Politenels without Affectation. This is what it appears to me, after a careful Perusal of this Work; But, as I wanted Opportunity of examining it with the Ancient and Original Authors, from whence it was taken; so all that I can say as to that Matter is, That I have no Reason to think it unfaithful or defective: And I am glad to find my own Design so well incourag'd, and so advantageously pursu'd.

Louth in Lincolnshire, Novemb. 6. 1703.

Lau. Echard.

The

The Author's

be eat-

e is oth

th-

P-

-36

nt

it

to n

d ò

PREFACE

HE great Success the two First Volumes of the Roman History met with in the World, tho it was no more than what was due to the Author's Merit, was however an undeniable Instance of its extraordinary Usefulness and Entertainment. As the Subject was great and peculiar, so was it written with a Genius equal to it; and the several Excellencies of those ancient Authors that have been made use of in the framing this History seem blended together, so as to dress it out in all the Beauties of Antiquity. These obvious Considerations made me think, that at least the vulgar Readers might probably defire to know what was the End

A 4

d

6

I

t

of that State, which had been so extraordinary in its Beginning; and to leave it with the Second Volume look'd, in my Opinion, like a Ceremony too much in practice amongst some Men, who stick fast to their Friends in their Prosperity, but drop 'em with the first Opportunity, when once Fortune has forsaken 'em. The Roman Greatness appear'd too Majestick, even in its Ruins, not to require our Attention; for Great Men, as whilft living they are gaz'd upon with Admiration, so when dead are they usually attended with a solemn Reverence to their Graves: But another more prevailing Motive made me wish a Continuation of this History. The Enemies of Christianity have imputed the Downfal of the Roman Empire to the Principles of our Religion, as if it choak'd in its Professors the Courage, Vigour and Generosity of their Fore-fathers, and taught 'em to be fluggish, unactive, and no otherwise than passively Valiant; that it was inconfistent with that Greatness of Mind, which so eminently distinguish'd the ancient Romans from the rest of their Cotemporaries, and introduc'd a Poorness of Spirit, that made'em careless and insensible of their ancient Glory.

4-

UE

y

72 k

,

,

e

This was not only glane'd at by the Heathen Writers of those Times, but is too frequently insisted upon in common Discourse by some Men of this Age, who think themselves wiser than the rest of Mankind, and assume a Privilege of condemning the Sense of all those whose Reason won't suffer 'em to concur with them in their airy Fancies, and illgrounded Imaginations. The Reader, upon a Perusal of the following Sheets, will find the Fallacy of those Infinuations, and that the Downfal of the Roman Empire was owing to other Causes than what have been suggested by these Men; and that both Principles and Practices, very opposite to those enjoin'd by the Gospel, occasion'd its Ruin.

As soon as I understood that he, who was best able, intended to concern bimself no farther in it, I was persuaded to undertake this Third Volume; but by that time I had diligently consulted the Original Authors, from whom I was to be supply'd, and had recourse to those Modern Writers, upon whose Assistance I in a great measure depended, I quickly found how much Difficulty there was in the Attempt. However, the Encouragement I received from some who had the Perusal of the First Part of it, and who were Men of too much Learning and Judgment to be deceived themselves, and of too much Integrity to deceive me, made me proceed with great Chearfulness; nor, 'till the Publick Censure of the World has condemn'd me, will I repent of my Undertaking.

I have throughout this Third Volume aim'd at so much Sincerity, the very Life of History, that I may presume to tell the English Reader he must not think himself conversing with a Modern Wri-

who

im-

ded

by

the

to

ose

nce ck-

vas

ou-

ad

end

ing

es,

ne,

ul-

of

re-

me

ry

to

nk

ri-

ter

ter in the following Sheets, but with Ammianus Marcellinus bimfelf, with Zozimus, Aurelius Victor, Eutropius, Cassiodorus, and the rest; the Substance of whose Histories, as far as they related to my present Design, I endeavour'd faithfully to recite, divefled of that Partiality, which, upon an unbias'd Enquiry, appear'd too notorious in some of the best among 'em, and are a manifest Instance to us of Human Frailty. Nor must I omit the great Helps I receiv'd from Monsteur Le Seur, and Doctor Howell, who at least directed me in my Enquiries, and often help'd me out in my Method and Observations.

As I am ready to confess my self far from being perfect in my Performance, so, by way of Excuse, may I be allow'd to reply, that neither are these my Guides infallible; they are most of 'em distinguish'd by some peculiar Failings, which I have endeavour'd to avoid, because I knew I was to be answerable for Faults enow enow of my own. I have interserted so much of the Church Affairs, as I thought would appear to be of a piece with the Body of the History. If the Reader sinds my Time not ill spent, my Design is answer'd, nor will I be concern'd at the Opinion of some Men, with whom Learning is of so small a value, that a bare Pretention to, or Acquaintance with it, is an unanswerable Objection with them, as if that Man was unsit to thrive in the World, who entertain'd Thoughts that soar'd above the Dregs of it.

So

ht

be

en

gn

711

a

th

th

ve ts

TABLE

OFTHE

EMPERORS.

Ugustulus and 353d Emp. pag. 375. Anthemius and 3 52d Emp. p. 359, to 366. Arcadius and 48th Emp. p. 232, to 312. Honorius. Avitus and? 751st Emp. p. 353, and 354. Martian, Constantine the Great, 41st Emp. p. 1, to 6. Constantine II. 142d Emp. p. 8, to Constantius, Constans, 5 65. Glycerius and ? 52d Emp. p. 369. Leo, Gratian, 46th Emp. p. 185, to 199. Jovian, 44th Emp. p. 90, to 99.

Julian,

A Table of the Emperors.

Julian, 43d Emp. p. 66, to 87. Leo, 52d Emp. p. 355, to 370. Majorianus and 52d Emp. p. 355, to 357. Leo. Martian, 51st Emp. p. 337, to 355. Maximus and? 51ft Emp. 349, to 351. Martian, Nepos and 53d Emp. p. 371, to 375. Zeno, Severus and 52d Emp. p. 357. Leo. Theodosius the Great, 47th Em. p. 190, to 231. Theodosius II. 49th Emp. p. 263, to 336. Valentinian I. and \ 45th Emp. p. 102, to Valens, Valentinian II. and] 46th Emp. p. 163, to Gratian, Valentinian III. 50th Emp. p. 315, to 348. Zeno, 53d Emp. p. 372, ad finem.

THE

57.

21.

to

to

.8.

É

LIT

CONTENTS.

VOL. III.

CHAP. I.

FROM the Removal of the Imperial Seat by Constantine the Great, to the Admission of the Goths into Thrace; containing about 45 Years. Page 1

CHAP. II.

From the Admission of the Goths into Thrace, to the Death of Theodosius the Great; containing about the Space of 19 Years. Page 170

CHAP. III.

From the Death of Theodosius the Great, 'till the Taking of Rome the First Time by

The Contents.

by the Goths; containing the Space of almost 16 Years. Page 232

CHAP. IV.

From the Taking of Rome by the Goths, to the Total Failure of the Western Empire in Augustulus; containing the Space of 66 Years. Page 296

THE

WILLIAM THE

Carne in Children Carne Lang.

Prompet bearing

Try on the Part of the te with the Syationer contained which

Waster Waster 3.

According at 17th College walls nels received a fatal Stroker which the Reader will जिसके दे कि लिए के मार्गिक के लिए के अर्थना it never alier appealth it marked Vic like Flowers transplanted into a Farm S, to 296 ing Emperors In all Orl From the Removal of the Imperial Seat by Constantine the Great to the Total Failure of the Western Empire In Augustulus. Luffre of the City; Containing the Space of about 146 Tears. bitants by many Acts of Giace, flect di many whollow Pas I mollody vient 1 E finding himfelf for two or th From the Removal of the Imperial Seat by Constantine the Great, to the Admission of the Goths into Thrace warman and you who finding Confrantes had evacuated Containing about 43 Tearson's 2001 Meeta and Thrace, where they committed unl edi OW prevalent foever the Reafons that A. D. Seat at Byzantium appeared then to him, 330. Experience has fince shown they were weak and im-Politick; for undoubtedly by that the Roman Greatness receiv'd a fatal Stroke: And the Reader will find, in the Profecution of this History, which we intend, God willing, to continue down to the Total Failure of the Western Empire in Augustulus, that it never after appear'd in its natural Vigour; but like Flowers transplanted into a Foreign Clime, languish'd by degrees, and shrunk at length into nothing.

. However, as he defign'd to fix his own Court there for the future, so he desir'd it might be honour'd with the ordinary Residence of the succeeding Emperors; for which Purpose he omitted no Cost or Labour, that might render it either beautiful or convenient, and by that Means invite 'em thither. He divided it into fourteen Regions, built a Capitol, made a Circus Maximus, an Amphitheatre, feveral Forums, Portions's, and other publick Works; which, together with the many Churches built upon a Religious Account, added much to the Lustre of the City. The Magnificence of which when he found it answerable to the Greatness of his Design, in a very solemn Dedication he consecrated it To the God of the Martyrs; encourag'd the Inhabitants by many Acts of Grace, fecur'd them by many wholfome Laws, and Royal Immunities; for finding himself for two or three Years past disengag'd from War, he had more leifure to purfue his A. D. other Designs; but the Year following he was drawn by the Sarmatiansinto their Quarrel with the Goths, who finding Constantine had evacuated all the Garrifons along the Danube, made new Irruptions into Mæsia and Thrace, where they committed unheard of Cruelties, and ravag'd the Country; but the Emperor, by his Son Constantine, obtain'd a memorable Victory over 'em, and finish'd the War with that Suceefs, that near a hundred thousand of the Enemy were destroy'd by Hunger and Cold, besides those that fell nels 332.

Chap. I. XLI. Constantine the Great.

by the Sword; upon which they were constrain'd to fue for Peace, and deliver up Holtages to the Emperor, among whom was their King's Son.

The Sarmate thus deliver'd from the Inroads of the Goths, were, two Years after, more cruelly oppress'd by their own Slaves, whom in their Extremities they had been forc'd to arm against their Enemies, and who by that means grown fentible of their Strength, threw off the Yoke, and turn'd their Arms against their Masters, for whose Defence they had been entrufted in their Hands; and herein they fucceeded fo well, that they forc'd'em, to the Number of three hundred thousand of both Sexes, all Ages and Conditions, to fly for Refuge to the Emperor; by whom they were disposed in several Parts of Thrace, Scythia, Macedonia, and Italy, but fuch among em as were fit for Service he incorporated in his Legions. This Example being follow'd by feveral of the fucceeding Emperors, prov'd very pernicious to the Empire; for these Barbarians growing too strong for the natural Inhabitants, among whom they were fettled, by degrees disposses'd their Landlords, and became Masters of the Country. This Year Syria and Cilicia were grievoully afflicted with a Pettilence and Famine, which swept off an infinite Number of People, as likewise a great many were destroy'd by an Earthquake in Cyprais.

And as these Parts of the Body Politick labour'd under those Civil Calamities, so was the Church no less afflicted with intestine Distractions; for about this time we find Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, cruelly perfecuted by the prevailing Arians, and formally condemn'd in the Council of Tyre, for feveral pretended Crimes objected against him: From whence we may learn, how fatal the Prosperity the Church then enjoy'd prov'd to her, how it open'd the Gates of the Sanctuary it felf to Corruption,

A. D.

333.

vill We

1.

0hat out

anno-

urt ho-

ed-

по

au-

em

uilt

ica-

lick

hes

the

ich

his

red

ha-

by

for len-

his

nwa

ths,

ITTI-

into

eard

m-

able

Suc-

verc

fall

by

and infatuated fo many of her Teachers with Envy, Malice, and Ambition.

These things happen'd in the thirtieth Year of the Emperor's Reign, at which time Calocerus, a Man of great Authority in the Island of Cyprus, procur'd himself to be declar'd Emperor: But Dalmatius being sent with an Army against him, deseated him, and took him Prisoner; and having settled all things in that Island, he carry'd him to Tarsus in Cilicia, where he was burnt alive.

For this Service he was created Cafar, together with Constans the Emperor's third Son, in the same Year, being the thirtieth of Constantine's Reign, which he celebrated at Constantinople with great Magnificence: And the Year following Constantius, his second, was marry'd to Eusebia a Lady of an illustrious Birth, and extraordinary Knowledge for one of her Sex. The Nuprials were folemniz'd with all imaginable Splendor, the Men and Women feasted apart, and the Emperor, in honour thereof, bestowed Gifts upon all Nations and Cities. These Feastings were prolong'd by the Arrival of some Ambassadors from the East-Indies, who brought him Prefents of great Value, but greater Rarity; not only precious Stones, but several Animals unknown before to the Western Parts of the World; intimating, as my Author has it, that his Empire extended to the utmost Bounds of the Ocean, and that as Britain, the Limits of the West, submitted to him at his first Promotion, so now at last the Indians in the East acknowledg'd his Sovereign Authority.

Having receiv'd this Homage from the Indian Ambassadors, he divided the Government of the Empire in this manner; Constantine the Eldest commanded in Gaul, and some Western Provinces; Constantius govern'd Africk and Illyricum; and Constant rul'd in Italy. Dalmatius was sent to defend those

Parts

A.D.

Chap. I. XLI. Constantine the Great.

L

y,

of

2

0-

a-

ed

all

in

er

ne.

Π,

at 45,

an or

th

ed

W-A-

la-

e-

y

as he

in,

nis

ast

m-

n-

m-

171-

210 le

rts

Parts that border'd upon the Goths; and Annibalianus had the Charge of Cappadocia, and Armenia the less. This Division was not made by Constantine, as if he intended by that to divelt himself of his Sovereignty, but for the better Government of the Empire, and Education of his Sons, tho'it feem'd indeed an Omnious Introduction to that Partition, which was made in little more than a Year after. He was now near fixty Years of Age, and yet was so healthy and vigorous as to endure Exercise Riding, and Travel; of so perfect in Understanding as to be able still to compose Prayers and Orations, and afift with much Dexterity at the framing his Laws both Civil and Military.

ration, in which he discours'd much of the Immortality of the Soul, and the Rewards and Punishments of another Life; by thefe, and such like Methods, preparing for himselfan easie Dismission out of this; 'till his Meditations were interrupted by the Disturbance the Persians made in the East, of which, as foon as he receiv'd an Account, he rais'd a powerful Army, intending, as he faid, to make this his last Victory; but the Enemy being advertis'd of his fudden Expedition, and fearing to be engag'd in a War with him, dispatch'd away their Ambassadors, who, upon an humble Debre of his Friendship, and a Promise to make good whatever Satisfaction should be requir d, obtain'd a Reace. After this, anding himself feaverish and distemper'd, he made afe of the warm Baths of the City, but receiving no Benefit from thence, he remov'd for change of Air to Helenopolis (a City built by him in Memory of his Mother) and from thence to Nicomedia; in the Suburbs of which Place, call'd Achyrona, he was Baptiz'd, declaring he design'd to

Not long before his Death he made a Funeral O-

A. D. 337.

have receiv'd that Seal of his Salvation in the Waters Constanters of Jordan, but God in his infinite Wisdom had otherwise dispos'd of him. Then having partaken of the Holy Eucharist, he departed this Life on the two and twentieth Day of May, in the 62d Year of his Age, and 32d of his Reign (tho the punctual time as to both is not fully agreed upon) the first Year of the 279th Olympiad, the 1090th Year of Rome, An. Dom. 337. Fab. Tatianus and Felicianus being Consuls, and about seven Years after the Removal of the Imperial Seat to Constantinople. Thus dy'd Constantine the Great, to the unexpressible Grief of the whole Empire, especially of the Church, which he had freed from Tyranny, and a most horrible Persecution.

His Cha-

The Character of this Emperor is variously defcrib'd, according to the various Passions and Affections of those Authors who have writ concerning him; the Heathen Writers wounding his Memory with all the Virulence imaginable, and the Christians beautifying it with accumulated Honours and Encomiums; however they all agree in this, that he was a Prince of innumerable Excellencies both of Body and Mind, ambitious of Military Glory, fortunate in War, but not more Fortunate than Industrious; a great Promoter of Learning, and of himself much addicted to Read, Write, and Meditate; if he was fometimes over credulous, as in the Cafe of his Wife Faufta, and the Eusebiens, by whose artificial Infinuations he was induced to Discountenance St. Athanasius, and the Orthodox Christians, it proceeded more from the Easiness than Malignity of his Nature, and was a Fault in others rather than in himself. His improvident Removal to Comfrantinople, and fatal Division of the Empire at his Death, are indeed Errors too apparent to be vindicated: But then his Zeal for the Gospel, and the Protection he gave it throughout his Dominions, made made his Subjects and Posterity a Compensation more than equivalent, by opening to em the Gates of Everlasting Life, and giving em a Title to a better Kingdom, of an Eternal Duration.

Chap I. XLI. Constantine the Great.

IID

dom

Par-

the pon)

ooth

and antiially

/ran-

de-

am:

with tians

En-

was ody

nate

ous;

uch he

his

rcial

ince

H

her

his ndi-

the

ons,

The Soldiers, fo foon as they heard of the Emperor's Death, tore their Cloaths, fell proftrate on the Ground, knock a their Heads against the Walls, and gave other Publick Testimonies of their Sorrow, as were agreeable to fo general a Calamity; whilft their Officers in mournful and passionate Expressions call'd him their Preserver, Deliverer, and Common Parent; and the Townsmen joining with the rest in the Solemnity of Woe, ran like Mad-men about the Streets, or fate at home bewailing their Loss, dejected and oppres'd with Sorrow. When Grief would give 'em leave, the Soldiers took up the Body, and, covering it with Purple, carry'd it in a solemn manner to Constantinople, where it was expos'd in the Palace, with Lights burning round it, and Attendants watching it. Here Court was kept as if he had been ftill living; the great Othcers that were wont to adore or falute, doing their Duty to him now as formerly; the Senate and all the Magistrates paid him the same Respect, and the Citizens were not wanting to testifie their deep Sense of his Loss, who had been to Noble a Founder and Benefactor to the City. Nor did Old Rome forget to sympathize with the New; for as foon as they heard of his Death all their Shops and Publick Baths were shut up, their Sports and Recreations which were us'd in times of Prosperity were intermitted. So publick was the Loss of one Prince, who in his Life had been fo general a Bleffing.

II. Constantins (while his Brethren were abfent) arriv'd at Nicomedia soon after his Father's Decease, and his first Act of Authority was his putting to Death his Uncle Confrantins Dalmas tins, and his Sons Constantins Cafar, and Anaballing nus: Tho' fome think he no more than barely pero mitted, rather than order'd thefe Executions ; ver they who plead, by way of Excuse, his Father's Command in his last Will, because they attempted to poison him, as some have improbably reported. and the Danger of Competition (for three Brothers were thought sufficient for the Government of the Empire) leave no room to doubt of the large share he had in 'em. However it were, this Act no way deterr'd the Soldiers from declaring him and his Brethren Augusti, or Emperors, which they did on the fifth of the Ides of September; and some time after the Division of the Empire was confirm d between 'em at Sirmium in Pannonia. In which Divifion, Gaul, Spain, Britain, and part of Africa Proconsularis fell to Constantine the eldest; to Constans the youngest, Italy, with the rest of Africk, Illy ricum. Macedonia and Greece, and those Parts that border'd upon the Euxine Sea; and to Constantius Mefia, Thrace, with Constantinople, Afia, Egypt, and the Eastern Empire, as far as from Illyricam to Nifibis. This Partition, tho' founded upon their Father's Testament, was not made without some Heat and Dissatisfaction; which, the compos'd for fome time by Constantius, prov'd in the end fatal to the eldest, who thinking his Share too little for an elder Brother, demanded of Constans no less than the rest of Africk, and all Italy; and to make good his Claim invaded his Brother's Territories with a powerful Army, and was flain near Aquileia, in the third Year of his Reignod han attal and at on wall

B 4

his

A. D. In the mean time Constantius remov'd into Syria against Saper, King of Persia; who presuming upon Constantine's Death, and the mean Opinion he had of his Children, had ravag'd Mesopotamia, and was fate

hap. I. XLII. Constantius, Constans.

ID

BAR.

Liza

pero

yet

er's

ted

ted.

ners

the

are vay

his

on

me

be-

IVI

TOans

lly

hat

WS.

pt

to eir

me for

to

an

ant-

od

1:3

In

中部 ria

on

ad .

as .

te

te down before Nifibis, which Confrancius was . A .A folv'd to relieve, but the Work was done to his ands before his Arrival; for Saper despairing of uccess had rais'd the Siege, and was retiring back. his was attributed to the Sanctity of Tames the ishop, during whose Life and Residence there all s Defigns against that City were ineffectual.

After this Constantius, that he might have leifure attend other Affairs; incited the Arabians to inde King Sapor, and divert him elfewhere; whilft intent upon fuch Regulations in that Country he found necessary, issued out several Edicts to at purpose, by one especially inhibiting all Instuous Marriages, under no less a Penalty than at of Death. Here we shall leave him, 'till the ffairs in Italy call upon him to revenge the Murr of his Brother Constans, who was now become e Emperor of the West by the Death of Constane, and in the Year 341 gain'd a Battel against the ranks in Gaul, and the Year following overthrew d quieted them; from thence he came over into Constans ritain to punish the Scots and Picts, who had star- his Wars in d out into Rebellion. The Particulars of this Gaul. xpedition, which were recorded in the former Part Ammianus Marcellinus his History, are with at Piece loft to Posterity. After this he return'd to Gaul, and having obtain'd to himself a quiet offession of his Brother's Provinces he grew remis, nd through his Intemperance contracted an ill Hait of Health, which render'd him very unfit for usiness, and regardless of the State; nor did he ke care to supply it with honest and able Miniers, but preferr'd those to the most profitable Emoyments, who were able to lay down the most lony for 'em, and who for that reason oppress'd e People by an irregular Administration; the Oium of which, as it is customary in such Cases, flew

A. D. flew back upon himself. This, together with his Inactivity, which had render'd him difagreeable to 349. the Army, and the Absence of Constantius, who will

us Rebels.

Magnenti- employ'd in the Persian War, encourag'd Magnes tims, who had the Command of two Legions, to fee up for himself, in which he was affisted by Man cellinus Præfect of the Treasury. Marcellinus, in Honour of his Son's Birth-day, had invited Maynentius, and feveral among the chief of the Army to a Supper; and about Midnight, whilst they went in the height of their Jollity, Magnentius upon a pretence of some necessary Occasion withdrew, but short time after return'd in the Imperial Robes at tended by a Guard. Those of the Company who were privy to the Design immediately saluted him with the Title of Emperor, and the rest, who at first look'd on it as no other than a Play or a Jell, (and as fuch it's probable, had the Plot miscarry'd, they intended it should pass) surpriz'd with the thing, at last follow'd their Example. Several of the chief Citizens of Autun, where this Scene was acted, were then in Company, who concurring with the rest induc'd the Inhabitants to salute and own him as Augustus; by which means he seiz'd on the Palace, and distributed Mony among the Multitude, they who continu'd Loyal to their Prince being too weak to oppose him. Having proceeded Procures thus far, he fent Gaifo, a principal Commander in the Army, with a Party of Men to dispatch Con-Constans to be mur- stans; who being advis'd of what had pass'd, threw der'd. off the Imperial Robe, thinking to make his Escape, but was murder'd by Gaifo himself in a Place calld Helena, a little Village at the Foot of the Pyrenet. Thus fell Constans in the tenth Year after the Death of Constantine his Brother, in the Consulship of Sergius and Nigrinianus, An. Dom. 356. His violent End may feem a just Return of Providence 350. upon

A. D.

350.

thap. I. XLIL Confrancius.

III

h dù

ole to

Wil

quen

tole

Mar

(S, III May.

rmy

Wert

a prebut

S at

who

him

no at Jef,

ry'd,

hing,

chief

ated,

the

him

the ulu

rince

eded

er in

Con-

hrew

cape,

calld

ersees.

the

thip His

ence upon

pon him for the Murther of his Brother, and his pole intemperate Life. At his first Entrance upon he Government his Administration was both just nd vigorous; and it may be faid of him throughut his whole Reign, that all the Provinces under is Jurisdiction enjoy'd a continu'd Screnity; for e kept the Neighbouring Nations in Peace about im, which was attributed rather to his Art in prouring of Hoftages, than the Terror of his Arms: But his Tyrannical Deportment after his Brother's Death, his Licentious Life, and the little Care he. ad to fee the Discipline of the Army strictly oberv'd, encourag'd Magnentius to rife up against im, and Crown his Rebellion with his Death. But the People quickly found themselves the Losers this unhappy Change, for Magnentius was of a ruel barbarous Nature, and being elevated with is Success caus'd all the Magistrates in the Counry, whom he had fent for in Confrans his Name, be- Magnentiore his Death was known, to be Murder'd upon us his Cruhe Road; nor could he restrain his Hands from elly. he Blood of some of those who were Conspirators with him. Notwithstanding all these his Cruelties, nd tho' he had declar'd his two Brothers, Decentius and Defiderius, Cafars, and at the same time dispatch'd em to make fure of Gaul and Spain, yet was his Sovereignty frail and precarious; for no fooner had Nepotianus, the Nephew of Constantine the Great, Nepotiaheard of the Death of Constans, but he went with mus fets up a Company of Gladiators, and several others of for himself. broken and desperate Fortunes, who had espoused his Caufe, to feize on Rome, which some of Magnentius his Party had secured before, wherefore he fate down before the City and Befiep'dit; but engaging with Marcellinus, whom Magnentius had Nepotia-fent with an Army against him, he was defeated, edged flain. and loft his Head, after he had pleas'd himself with the Title of Emperor twenty feven Days. But Heav'n, which thought fit to punish Magnential for his perfidious Ingratitude to his Master, rais'd him up another Competitor in the Person of Vereranio, General of the Foot in Pannonia. He fearing least Magnentius, who was now become Master of Italy, should break into Pannonia, and posses himself of that Country too, assum'd the Imperial Robe, and was faluted Emperor by the Legions under his Command, by whose Assistance he securd that Province, and fix'd his Head Quarters at Murfa a Town belonging to it. Some fay he advertise Constantius of his Proceedings, promising to assist him against Magnentius, which will not feem improbable if we confider the kind Usage he after wards met with from that Emperor, who received the News of his Brother's Death, and Magnenting his Usurpation, with a Resentment that became him, and was fully refolv'd to chaftise the Treasons but was at present deeply engaged in the Persian War. For Sapor, taking an Advantage from the Disturbance in the West, had miserably ravaged

bis,

Sapor Be- Mesopotamia, and was fat down before Nisibis; sieges Nifi- and finding the Besieged resolute to defend it, he drew the River off from the Town, thinking by that means they would be constrain'd to surrender; which when he found ineffectual, for the Defendants digged very deep Wells, and had Fountains within fufficient to supply that want, he turn'd the River against the Town, and made a Breach in the Wall, which however was by an extraordinary Industry repair'd; despairing therefore of Success, and hearing the Massagetes were making Inroads into his own Country, he return'd home after he had turns with lost a considerable part of his Army. loss.

Whereupon Constantius remov'd the following Year A: D. into Pannonia, and in his way from Constantinople 350. Was was fers (tani retu Nig ding tron dere fo fo feng Sara his clina ror, the . two call'o

um,

how

Ch

B buna the ! Spee very ged traoi had his S upor vind facto the prese

Thr

dow

Imp

Conf

20

LT+

er

eß

ial

d

4

d

a

n;

tes

d

IS,

e

ı

S

was met by Messengers from Magnentius with Offers of Accommodation. Tis faid that whilft Confantins was deliberating on the Answer he should return, his Father appear'd to him in a Dream the Night following, holding Constans in his Hand, bidding him revenge the Death of a Prince descended from fo many Emperors, upon a Tyrant and Murderer, and therein vindicate the Imperial Throne from fo foul an Abuse: Whereupon committing the Meffengers to Custody, he went with all Expedition to Sardica, a Town in Dacia. Veteranio, surpriz'd at his Diligence, and having before entertain'd an Inclination for his Services went out to meet the Emperor, and receive him at his Approach; who, glad of the Advantage, and pleas'd that he should not have two Enemies to deal with at once, embrac'd him, call'd him Father, carry'd him with him to Sirmium, fet him at his Table, and consulted with him how to profecute the War.

But some time after, when both ascended the Tribunal to harangue the Army, and Constantius, from the Dignity of his Birth, had the Precedency of Speech given him; he reminded the Soldiers, in a very eloquent Address, how much they were obliged to his Father, whose Liberality had been so extraordinary towards them, and before whom they had taken so many Oaths of Duty and Allegiance to his Sons: That therefore they were bound to revenge upon Magnentius his Brother's violent Death, and vindicate the Off-spring of their Patron and Benefactor from Treason and Assalination. Upon this the Soldiers, fenfibly touch'd by so pathetical a Representation, disdaining an Usurper should fit on the Throne of Constantine the Great, pull'd Veteranio Veteranio down from the Tribunal, and depriv'd him of the deportally Imperial Robes, who thereupon threw himself at the Sol Constantins his Feer, and obtain'd an easie Pardon diers.

Ch

Arr

per ry,

Stre

bro

Me

Met

the

ado

the

wit

his

Bat

Bat

did

nen

Ri

wh

Te

dea

hin

arm

wit

be

Sir

and

tim

wa:

wh

ren

Ron

aga

and a v

he

ena

per

from the Emperor; who, in Compassion to his en tream Age, allow'd him a Revenue fuitable to his Quality, confining him to Prufias, a City in Birth nia, where he spent the Residue of his Days with out ever intermeddling in the Affairs of the Empire. After this, Constantins, finding the Admin. stration of Power and Authority in Countries at lo great a distance a Burden too unequal for one Man. and despairing now of any Male-Issue, marry'd Gallus, his Uncle Constantius's Son, to his own Sifter ated Cælar.

Gallus ere- Constantina, and conferr'd on him the Title of Cofar; who in his Absence was to have an Eye upon the Persians, and take care of the Eastern Provinces, whilft he was intent upon the Usurpation of Magnentius, and fettling the Affairs of the Empire in the West. But Magnentius, apprehensive of the Emperor's Intentions, chose rather to meet him abroad, than expect him in those he call'd his own Dominions, and thereupon advanc'd with his Army to Noricum, and thence into Pannonia, where he took Sciscia by Assault, and laid it even with the Ground. After this he wasted the Country lying upon the Save, and fate down before Sirmium, but being repuls'd from thence by the couragious Defence of the Inhabitants, he remov'd, and laid close Siege to Mursa, which Constantius was resolv'd to relieve; of whose Approach, when Magnentius was advis de he dispos'd an Ambuscade of four thousand Gasts in a Wood adjoining, with Orders to fall upon the Enemy's Rear, when they found both Armies engag'd: Of this the Belieg'd found Means to acquaint the Emperor, who thereupon fent away two Tribunes with a strong Detachment to stop up all the Avenues to the Place, by which Means the whole Party was cut of.

Magnentins seeing his Stratagem ineffectual, gave Constantius Battel in the Plains of Mursa; and both 352.

Armies

by the min for any attraction in-of ire

he

1 2-

WO

ny

ook

nd.

he

re-

of

to

ve;

d,

uls

he

en-

2C-

WO

all

the

YE

oth

ies

Armies fought with that Resolution, that the Emperor, tho' he gain'd an absolute and entire Victo- Magnentiry, was deeply concern'd to fee how much the us over-Strength of the Empire was thereby impair'd and broken. Magnemins is said to have lost thirty thousand Men in this Fight, but for himfelf, when he found his Men begin to give Ground, and fearful of falling into the Emperor's Hands, he turn'd his Horse loose, adorn'd as it was with the Imperial Ornaments that the Enemy might imagine the Rider was flain, and fled with a few of his Party into Italy, there to recruit Flies into his broken Troops, and try the Fortune of another Italy. Battel. Constantion, as foon as it was Day (for the Battel continu'd all Night, with fuch Animofity did they engage) beheld from an adjoining Eminence the Plain cover'd with dead Bodies, and the River it felf, that ran by, choaled up with them; at which melancholy Sight he could not refrain from Tears, exclaiming against Magnentius, who had been deaf to all his Messages of Peace, tho' he had made him an Offer of Ganh upon condition he would difarm: He order'd all that were flain to be bury'd without distinction, and such as were wounded to be attended with Care; after which he retird to Sirmium, where he relided the rest of this Year, and the greatest part of the next, ordering in the mean time fome of his Troops to pursue Magnentius, who was retiring in the best Order he could to Pavia, where he defeated Constantins his Commanders, and remov'd from thence with an Intent of getting into Rome, but at his Approach he found the Gates shut against him; upon this he passed over into Gaul, and by the Affiltance of his two Brothers he rais'd a very confiderable Army in these Provinces, which he knew were firm to his Service, and to he was integral enabled once more to try his Fortune with the Emperor; who hoping by his Prefence to redeem the

From thence into

Losses

C

Ipa

the

int

H

Fri

Ex

WO

fide

lin

ling

anc

ran

Sca

W2

rais

mo

Re

fui

the

the

par

tail

the

wa:

mi

Con

rity

nen

Con

Son

Sec

aft

his

fian

ac

ror marches a-

Loffes he had fustain'd by his Generals, after hav publish'd an Act of Oblivion, whereby he grant free Pardon to all fuch as would return to their D ty, excepting those who were guilty of the man Murders committed during the Rebellion, and and ther touching the Auxiliary and Provincial Troops The Empe-went in Person into Ganl, resolving vigorously carry on the War against Magnentius; who madel gainst him. resolute an Opposition, that several Encounters ha pen'd between 'em with various Success. At length Magnentius being defeated near Lyons retreated in the Mountains, where after he had endeavour'd in fet Speech to encourage his Men, whose Spirits be gan to fink under their ill Fortune, they answere the Conclusion of it, as the Custom was, by an Ac clamation; but through an unlucky Mistake, instead of Magnentius Augustus, saluted him by the Name of Constantius Augustus. This unlook'd for Omen fo exceedingly dishearten'd him, that he immediate ly dispatch'd a Person of Senatorian Rank, and after him fome Bishops, to treat of a Peace with the Em peror, who would not fo much as admit 'em to his Presence, thereby teaching Magnentius what he was to expect from him; who perceiving there was no room left for Pardon, recruited his Army in the best manner he could, and fent a Villain to murder Gallus at Antioch, hoping the Emperor would be thereby oblig'd to go himself in Person against the King of Persia, and withdraw his Army from him. But the Person he employ'd unadvisedly discovered the Secret of his Commission before he could put it in Execution, and was thereupon executed as a Trator. Some time after this happen'd another Engagement, near a Place call'd at this time Montluck, in Magnenti- which Magnentius was entirely routed, and with much Hazard made his Escape into Lyons. Where when he observ'd that the chief of his Followers, de spairing !

us again defeated.

spairing now of any farther Success, resolv'd to make their Peace with the Emperor, by throwing him up into his Hands, and for that purpose watch'd the House wherein he was lodg'd; he sent for those Friends and Relations that were near, whom in the Extravagance of Despair he slew with his own Hands, wounded mortally, as he thought, his Brother Defiderius, and at last dispatch'd himself, to prevent fal- Kills himling alive into Constantius's Power, and to avoid a felf. ling'ring Death; after he had reign'd three Years and an half. This was the deferv'd End of a Tyrant and Usurper; the first Rebel that brought a Scandal upon Christianity, (of which he made an outward Profession) by the Murder of his lawful Soveraign. He was a Man of a prodigious Stature, and most outragious Morals; for he made both Law and Religion fubfervient to his Ambition, and in the Purfuit of his aspiring Designs, trampled under Foot all the Obligations of Nature and Humanity. His Brother Decentius heard of his Death, whilst he was preparing to relieve him; and judging it impossible to obtain his Pardon from the Emperor, hang'd himself on the 18th of August, at Senona in Gaul: Tho' Desiderius was no fooner cur'd of his Wounds, but upon a fubmissive Application he met with an easie Pardon from Constantius; who however punish'd, with great Severity, the Chief of those who had join'd with Maynentius against him. Thus the Roman Empire, which Constantine the Great had divided among his Three Sons, became united in the Person of Constantins the Second, in the 17th Year of his Reign, and the 353d after the Birth of our Saviour; he himself being in his fixth, and Galles in his fecond Confulate.

Acceptance of the control of the con

ПО

the

der be en en et en

ich

ere

de

ing

III. At Arles the Emperor celebrated the Circenfian Games, upon the account of this important Victory; the News of which, when it was brought to C Rome.

Rome, was receiv'd with great Demonstration Joy and Satisfaction by the Senate and Peop Cerealis, Præfect of the City, erecting a Statue Constantius, with an Inscription declaring him Restorer of the City and the Empire, and the lisher of the late most pestilent Tyranny; while Emperor in the mean time was bulie at Lyons, fettling the Peace of those Parts, and restoring the to their former Obedience. He first publish de neral Pardon, and Act of Oblivion, to all who we not guilty of any Capital Crimes, fuch as Murder and the like; and then made void all the publick Acts the Usurper, in several of which he had grievous oppres'd those, who during his Usurpation had store firm to their Faith and Integrity. And to preven fuch Robberies as would otherwise ensue upon dif banding the Army, he by an Edict commanded all those who were to be dismiss'd, to apply themselves either to Tillage or Merchandize; threatning to punish the Disobedient with Death.

The rest of this Year, and the former part of the which follow'd, he continu'd either at Lyons or Arles; but towards the Spring he remov'd to Valentis, where he waited for the Provisions of his Army to be sent thither out of Aquitain, and prepar'd for a Expedition against Gundomadus and Vadomarins two Brothers, and Kings of the Germans; who by their frequent Incursions wasted the Borders of Gaul, and the adjoining Provinces. Here he first receiv'd the unwelcome News of Gallus Cafar's ex-

Gallus,

A.D.

354.

The extra- travagant Deportment in the East, who behav'd himvagant Be- felf more like a Tyrant and Madman, than a Prince haviour of fit to govern the Provinces committed to his Care. His unexpected Advancement, and some flight Advantages obtain'd over the Fews and Persians at his Entrance upon the Government, had instilled into him so much Pride and Arrogance, that he broke tion coo reft ra (as th bare turr ny colo Liv fide that man mer tow Def to I pos ing

Ch

out

wot

rais'

infu hos in pru

Wa

him

rog He tio

do hin

lick

we Pri

out into all the Acts of Violence imaginable; which won'd have ended in the Destruction of him that rais'd him, had his Power been equal to his Ambition. And left at any time his Passions should grow cool, they were kept in a continual Flame, by the restless and turbulent Spirit of his Wife, that Mega, and Conra of her Sex, whose Thirst after Blood was as great stanting. as that of her Husband. Some were murder'd upon bare Suspicion, others depriv'd of their Estates, and turn'd out a begging, without the Appearance of atny Accuser, or so much as a Slave, to put the least colour of Justice upon their Proceedings. Mens Lives were bought and fold, without any other Confideration, than the Pleasure or Advantage of those that drove the Bargain. Thus Clematius, a Nobleman of Alexandria, was murder'd by the Procurement of his Wife's Mother. She burning in Luft towards him, and not able to obtain her unnatural Defires, turn'd her Love into Hatred, and refolv'd to ruin what she could not enjoy. To which Purpose she apply'd herself to Constantina, and presenting her with a Bracelet of great Value, obtain'd a Warrant to Honorarus, Comes of the East, to pur him to Death, which was executed accordingly.

These Proceedings made Gallies his Government insupportable, and occasion'd vast Mischiefs; which however Thalaffins, the Prafectus Pratorio, might Thalaffins. in some measure have prevented, had he acted his impruprudently; but being himself of an haughty, ard dent Beharogant Temper, he opposed him with too much Heat and Licence, fending the Emperor Information tion of all his Actions, not privately, but in publick, and with a Defign Gallus should know he had done it; which, instead of reclaiming him, made him act with more Fury and Desperation. Thus were the Eaftern Provinces oppress'd by their own Prince at home, and at the fame time infulted by

はははるるのでのではない

74

his

DEO

out

their

Su

ch

ed

de

Se

m

Ea

he

wh

he

pir

all

Th

Pri

fair

his

upo

plie

low

WI

vol

me

and

Mu

Ap

the

Ty

Con

leifi

lent

tion

to 1

hav

the

fudden

their Enemies abroad. For the Ifauri, a People a custom'd to a ravenous pilfering Life, made fre quent Inroads into the neighbouring Parts, where they committed all manner of Violence, to revenge, as they pretended, an injurious Affront offer'd their Nation at Iconium, a Town in Pisidia, where some of their Country-men were expos'd to wild Beafte upon the Theatre, contrary to the Precepts of Chris stianity, and the Custom of Christians. After they had rifled all the Merchant Ships they could find riding on the Coast, and from thence proceed ed into the Inland Countries, stealing and killing whatever came in their way, they fate down before Selencia, and laid close Siege to it. Of this free quent Complaints being made to Gallus, he fent New bridius to relieve the Place, who hasten'd with what Forces he could draw together to raife the Siege; of whose Approach, when the Rovers were advertis'd, they fav'd him the Labour, for they retir'd into the neighbouring Mountains with Precis pitation, and dispers'd themselves.

Nor had the King of Persia any better Successat this time in his Attempts upon the Empire; he had order'd Nohodares, his General, to fall upon Me-Sopotamia, who found the Coasts too well securd by strong Forts and Garrisons to attempt any thing upon them, and therefore directed his whole Defign against Batne, a Town famous for a Mart held there every Year about the beginning of September, whither the choicest Indian Commodities were at that time Imported from other Parts for Sale; this Town he hop'd to furprize by means of a Wilderness that was near it; but his Intentions were discover'd, and he forc'd to retreat with Los and Difgrace. The Saracens in the mean time were more successful in their Irruptions, roving up and down, and destroying all they met; and then on a fudden retiring without giving the Enemy time to chink upon a Recovery, or Revenge.

e, 11

te

礥

er

d

d

19

re

e= /c=

ch

he

TE

D.

at

he

個 d irt

7 es

ar

of

ms os

ere

nd 11

en

During these Transactions Galles to far proceeded in his Outrages at Antioch, that he grew a Burden and Plague to all good Men, exercifing his Cruelties upon all alike, without regard to Quality, Sex or Age. He had Murder'd the Principal among the Senators, had not Honoratus, Comes of the East, oppos'die with an inflexible Resolution; and he was so highly delighted with the bloody Shows, which he exhibited daily upon the Theatre, that he had no Regard to the Publick Edicts of the Empire, by which they were exprelly forbidden. Of all these his Outrages Constantius was inform'd by Thalassius and others, and therefore resolv'd to deprive him of his Dignity, but endeavour'd first by fair Means and fober Remonstrances to recal him to his Duty, and commanded Domition the Præfect, upon his Arrival in Spria, to try by all gentle Applications to reclaim him. But he, instead of following the Emperor's Instructions, behav'd himself with too much Arrogance and Indifcretion, and provok'd Cafar to that degree, who did not usually meet with fuch rough Ufage, that he procur dhim and Montius the Quaftor in a cruel manner to be Murder'd, as he did likewise Epigonius, Eusebius, Apollinaris the Father, and the Son, and several o-Secretary of the second

Thus groan'd the Eastern Provinces under the Tyrannical Government of Gallus, of which tho Constanting was but too sensible, he was not yet at leifure to repress him; for while he resided at Valentia, the better to profecute his German Expedition; his Army, which lay then at Cabillon, was ready The Army to Mutiny for want of Provision, which had like to Muhave prov'd fatal to Ruffinus, Prafectus Pretorio of tiny in the these Parts; for he being Uncle to Gallus by the want of Mother's Provisions.

C

A

in

ы

W2

fer

W(

he

to

be

by

he

GA

his

ha

inc

Ple

on

he

tru

fer

app

221 evi

fev

pe

abi

Cra

ble

ock

in

to

ma

D

ou lef

th

W

Mother's fide, was for his fake grown obnoxion to the Soldiers before, and was now required give them an Account how their Necessaries can to be detain'd fo long from them; and if the for wardest among them, and those who were capable of doing the most Mischief, had not been appeared by some Presents of Gold fent for that Purpose to Cabillon, by those who were chiefly concern'd the Severity of their Inquisition had undoubtedly extended to his Life; but their Fiercenels and Animosity being by this means quieted, and Provisions arriving in abundance not long after, the Præfect fav'd his Life, and the Army was in a readiness to They met with a vigorous Reliftance Rauracum, on the Bank of the Rhine, where when the Emperor had order'd a Bridge to be laid over the Enemy from the other Side ply'd the Workmen fo warmly with their Darts and Arrows, that it was impossible for them to appear upon the Water; this reduc'd the Emperor to great Straits, for he knew not what Course to take, 'till one unerpectedly offer'd himself for a Guide, and undertook, for a good Reward, to conduct 'em over at a Place where it was fordable; which, in the Obscurity of the Night, he had certainly effected, had not the Defign been discover'd by some of their own Country-men, who had principal Posts of Command in the Army. Notwithstanding which, the German sometime after, doubtful of the Success of their Arms, if they perfilted to the extremity, fent several . mong the chief of their Nobility to fue for Pardon and a Peace; to which the Emperor, by the Advice of his Council, and Approbation of his Army, readily confented, and so was now at leisure to confult what effectual Methods were to be taken to suppress and ruin his Cousin: The better to accomplish which he writ several obliging Letters to Com Stauting,

П

ious

1

am

able 231 e to

n'd.

dly

Mi.

ions feat

G to

-

hen

vet, ork-

that Wa.

for nez-

ook,

lace

v of

the

un-

in

-

ms,

a.

10

to

m-

081

114, stantina, expressing a mighty Defire to see her, and Constantiinvited her by all the tender Infinuations imagina- us refolves ble to come to Court, thinking that the readiest of Gallus. way to draw Gallus thither after her. She was too fensible of what she had done not to apprehend the worst from the Emperor; however she hop'd by her artful Infinuations, and the Privilege of a Sifter. to difarm his Rage, and without any farther Deliberation fet out to attend him, but was overtaken by a Feaver, which put an end to her Journey, and Constantiher Life at Cani Galliciani in Bithynia. This threw na dies. Gallus into a great Perplexity, for he had now lost his only Advocate with the Emperor, whom he had too much provok'd, and who he knew was too inclinable to destroy his Kindred, to listen to any Plea he could make, and was ready to lay hold on any Opportunity to destroy him. So that had he met with any Encouragement, or could have trusted those about him, who now began to defert him in diftruft of his inconstant Temper, and apprehension of Constantins his Power, he had certainly affum'd the Title of Emperor; but growing every Day more perplex'd in Mind, and being by feveral repeated Messages importun'd from the Emperor to come with all speed into his Presence, but above all perfuaded to it by Scudilo the Tribune, a crafty infinuating Man, who gave him all imaginable Affurances on the Emperor's part; he left Antioch, and fer our for Constantinopte, where like a Man in the midst of Security he exhibited Publick Shows to the People, and through his confident Behaviour made Constantius more sollicitous to provide for his Destruction; he therefore remov'd all the Garrisons out of the Towns through which he was to pais, left his Desperation might make him work any thing upon the Soldiers, and kept fuch a strict Watch upon him, that when he arriv'd at Adrianople,

in fo

who

folv

Lif

for

hel

far

of

of of

Was

Eu

Sch

Cr

lan

of in ber

Ge

ty,

col

the

ler ftr

cu

nu

M

fer

M

ple, and the Thebean Legions quarter'd in those Parts offer'd him their utmost Assistance, the Messengers were so narrowly observ'd, that they could by no means gain an Opportunity of speaking with

him.

Here he receiv'd fresh Letters requiring him to haften away, and ten publick Carriages were provided for the Conveniency of his Equipage, but all the Officers of his Court were left behind, except some few that attended in his Chamber, and waited on him at his Table. In this melancholy Condition he was hurry'd away to Petow, or Petovio in Noricum, curfing his own Easiness that had thus betray'd him into the Hands of his Enemies, and stung with Remorfe for his many Murders and causeless Cruelties; in this Agony of his Conscience, that he might no longer doubt of the Designs laid against him, Barbatio and Apodemius appeard attended by a Company of Soldiers, whom Gallas knew the Emperor had oblig'd fo well that they would decline executing nothing he should command; and Barbatio the next Day enter'd his Chamber before it was hardly Light, depriv'd him of the Imperial Robe, and cloath'd him in a common Habit, assuring him in the mean time by repeated Oaths, that nothing worse than what he had already feen and felt was intended by the Emperor against him; but ordering him to rife with all speed he immediately clapp'd him into a close Litter, and convey'd him to a Place near Pola in Istria, whither Constantius had fent Commissioners to examine him about those he had put to Death at Antioch. He with Looks full of Fear and Confusion, endeavourd the best he could to clear himself, alledging that what had been done proceeded chiefly from the Instigation of his Wife Constantina. Constantins grew the more enrag'd at this Answer, which reflected of the state of

-0-

ut

X-

nd ly

ton

ad 4

d

ns d

4

1-

of f

nd

in fo high a measure upon his Sister, and confequently upon himself; for which Reason, placing his whole Security in the Destruction of Gallas, he refolv'd to put an end to his own Fears, and the other's Life together, and accordingly fign'd the Orders for his Death, which was executed upon him as if Gallus pue he had been a common Thief. Thus fell Gallus Ca- to Death. far in the 29th Year of his Age, and the beginning of the fourth after his Promotion; he was the Son of Constanting, Brother to Constantine the Great, and of Galla, Sister of Ruffinus and Cerealis; his Death was chiefly owing to his own Tyrannical Deportment, but in a great measure to the Procurement of Eusebius the Eunuch, his inveterate Enemy, and to Scudile and Barbatio, who accus'd him of more Crimes than he really was guilty of, for which Villany they met with a just Reward, as we shall see hereafter. He was a comely well-proportion'd Man, of yellow Hair, and a thin Beard, but fo deprav'd in his Morals, that Ammianus will have him as much beneath his Brother Julian in every thing that was Good and Virtuous, as Domitian came short of Titus. Gallus was kill'd in the 1106th Year of the City, the 354th from our Saviour's Nativity, the fecond of the 283d Olympiad, Constantins the seventh, and Gallus Cafar the third time Confuls.

IV. The Emperor lay at Milan when he receiv'd the News of Cafar's Death, and what with the late Treasons of Magnentins, and Gallus his infolent Behaviour, he was grown fo jealous and di- Constantistrustful, that his Ears were open to all the Ac-us grows cusations, by which his Eunuchs and other insi- fealous and Cruel. nuating Courtiers procur'd the Ruin of many brave Men. He had by his Severity, and the Death of several Persons, render'd his Victory, obtain'd over Magnentius, less acceptable to the People, who found

Ch

wer

ban

use

nent

Lus,

up

tiou

to a

Wol

nit

qua

Bu

Ac

tuc

Ch

fat

Di

Tu R

VI

it

pe

na fu

ha

ſe

W

re

SI

d

I

found the Act of Indemnity of no Advantage in whomsoever the Emperor had the least Reason to mistrust. Some upon little more than the bare Sh dow of Guilt were first fetter'd like Wild Beath and then were put to Death, depriv'd of their B states, or banish'd, and that without the Appearance of any Accuser against them. These Proceedings cast a great Blot upon the Reign of Constantius, & specially in the Opinion of our Writers; for the Effects of his Jealousie extended as far as this I Paul, a stand, whither one Paul, a Notary, born in Spain, was fent to reduce fuch of the Army as had revolted to Magnentius. They that were guilty pur baviour there.

Spanish Notary, fent into Britain.

chas'd their Safety with their Mony, by which way of Traffick, having once tafted the Sweetness His Be- of Riches, like a ravenous Wolf, he ran headlong into all villainous Practices, making the most inno cent guilty, if they had but Estates, in which he intended to have a Share. One Martin was at this time Vicar of these Provinces, who being much offended at Paul's Oppressions, endeavour'd at first by his Intercessions to stop the Career of his Vil lany, but finding that ineffectual, he was then forced more openly to oppose him; and the Contest grew to high between them, that he refolv'd at length to quie this Place, rather than be a Witness of the daily Outrages that were committed. Paul, forefeeing this would put an end to his Trade, refolve to put him down among those that were to be accus'd, and us'd all his Interest at Court, that he might be fent for with the rest; of which when Martin was inform d he attempted to kill the Vil lain, but failing therein he turn'd his Sword against himfelf, and by that means eafed Paul of his Apprehentions, who purfu'd his Purpole, and carry his Prisoners up in Chains to Court, where some fuffer'd a long uncomfortable Imprisonment, others were

DCE

ings

the

I I

in.

re

Mile

ich efs

gac

no

ch

ch

1

9 4 6

he 64000

ft

were put to Torture; some were proscrib'd and banish'd, and others put to Death. This was the use the Emperor made of his Success against Maynentius, for after he found himself free from Gallus, he grew exceedingly elevated, and gave himfelf up to the Hyperbolical Encomiums of his Ambi- Constantitious Flatterers, by whom he was fo far poison'd as us his Vato arrogate to himself the Title of Lord of the whole World; yet whilst he aspir'd to transcend the Dignity of the greatest, he outwardly pretended to equal the Morality of the very best of Princes. But still his Ears continu'd so open to whatever Accusations were offer'd to him, that Multitudes of People were brought out of the East in Chains to Aquileia, where one Arbora and Eusebins fate upon'em as Judges, and without making any Distinction between the Guilty and Innocent pass'd Judgment equally upon all, fentencing some to the Rack, and after that to Banishment; others to Servile Offices in the Army, and the rest to Death it felf; for 'tis observable throughout this Emperor's Reign, that few or none escaped Condemnation in one of these kinds upon the smallest Prefumption of their Guilt, These venerable Judges having dispatch'd the Business for which they were fent, return'd back in Triumph to Constanting, who whilst he was employ'd in making Laws at Milan, relating to the Corporations and feveral Officers of State, and in too strict an Inquisition after Offenders, receiv'd Advice that the Lentienfes, a People dwelling upon the Borders of Germany, made frequent Incursions into the Roman Territories, upon which War was declar'd against them. The Emperor fet out in Person against them, and having march'd his Army into Rhetia, he there call'd a Council of War, wherein it was refolved that Arbetio, Master of the Horse, should be sent before with

Cha

he n

Arm

his F

n hi

tion

and

who

the I

the 1

The

fuch

knov

tho'

yet

Em

ftri

fho

fore

by

Ha

and

Ne

per

mo

an Da

the

no po

di

vi

all

W

with a felect Body, and fall upon 'em on a fudden near the Lake of Constance. Arbetio follow'd his Orders, but the Enemy, being inform'd of his coming, fet upon him at so great an Advantage that his Men were routed, and by the Favour of the Night most of 'em escap'd back to the Camp. The Germans were so elevated with this Success that they renew'd their Excursions, and before it was Light fallied out almost as far as the Roman Camp; but were fo warmly receiv'd, first by the Scutarii provok'd by their Insolence, and by degrees by the rest of the Army, that the greatest part of them were destroy'd, the rest slying as fast as they could from the Pursuers, leaving the Fields cover'd with the Slain. After the Emperor had obtain'd this fignal Victory he return'd in Triumph to Milan, and there took up his Winter-Quarters.

There he had not long staid before his groundless Jealousies expos'd him to new Troubles, which were like to have ended in his Ruin. Sylvanus at that time commanded in Gaul, whither he was sent by the Procurement and Authority of Arbetio, who was Conful this Year together with Lollianus, Sylvanus ow'd this Advancement to the jealous Artifices of Rival Courtiers, who are apt to fend those who are able to dispute their Master's Favour with them, far from his Presence upon some dangerous Employment. Gaul had of late been very much distress'd by the Inroads of the Barbarous Nations their Neighbours, who laid all waste before them with Fire and Sword. Arbetio thought this the most covenient Expedition to remove Sylvanus, if not out of the World, at least out of the Emperor's Sight, who as yet highly efteem'd him for his Merit. He was a brave experienc'd Commander, and proceeded with that Conduct against the Enemy, that by his Means Gaul was deliver'd from their Incursions. In the

A. D.

355,

Chap. I. XLII. Constantius.

age,

rof mp.

cels

e n

MAN the

rees

cof

ney rd

n'd

14 lefs

ich

at

nt

ho

14

TI-

ofe

th us

ch

13 m ft

X

he mean time Dynamins, a chief Commander in the Army, forg'd a Letter, directed from Sylvams to his Friends at Court, exhorting them to affift him h his Defign, which was no less than the Usurpaion of the Empire. This Letter was produc'd, and Dynamins appointed to enquire into the Matter; who immediately apprehended all those nam'd in the Paper who were near at hand, and fent to fecure the rest, who were abroad in the several Colonies. The Matter made so great a Noise, and was of fuch high Confequence, that Sylvanus could not but know the dangerous Condition of his Affairs: And tho', upon a stricter Enquiry, Florentius, great Master of the Houshold, discover'd the whole Intrigue, yet Sylvanus, who was well acquainted with the Emperor's credulous Temper, and knew how industrious Arbetio was to destroy him, concluded he should be condemn'd absent and unheard, and therefore at first resolv'd to throw himself into the Arms of the Barbarians; but being diffuaded from that by his Friends, he at length affum'd the Imperial Sylvanus Habit; encourag'd to it by his Principal Officers, fets up for and forc'd upon it for his own Prefervation. The Emperor. News of this Usurpation was brought to the Emperor at Milan, who in great Aftonishment summon'd his Council in the dead of Night, to confult with them what was to be done upon fo great an Emergency. Every one testify'd his Sense of the Danger, in the Distractions of his Countenance; they found it easier to raise a Storm than to lay it; nor knew they whom they could chuse, able to oppose the Torrent they saw rolling down upon 'em. At length they pitch'd upon Ursicinus, an old Sol- Against dier, perfectly acquainted in Military Affairs, ha- whom Urving ferv'd under and with Constantine the Great in ficinus is all his Wars. He had of late been in Difgrace, but was now fent for, and receiv'd with all the Honour

29

they

Ad

deg

Gu

wh

em

had fery

mie

in h

tho

mo

Ser

litt

tha

flai

CHS

Gr

thi

it,

Sec

tha

ひり

to

pre

ed

the

wi

me

aff

W

cir

he

an

be

ho

they thought due to a Deliverer. In employing him the Courtiers propos'd to themselves a double Advantage; for if he miscarry'd in the Attempt then should they be deliver'd from one, whose Ager they fear'd would, some time or other, bread out in a just Revenge upon 'em, for the Injuries he had receiv'd; but if he prevail'd upon Sylvanus, then they should be deliver'd from the Danger which at present hung over their Heads.

It was refolv d in Council, that Constantins, as i he knew nothing of Sylvanus his affuming the Imperial Title, should fend him a Letter by Orsicinus, enjoining him to accept of him for his Succeffer, and return, and enjoy those Places he held before a Court. Hereupon Vrsicinus receiv'd his Dispatch es, and taking with him ten Assistants, among whom was Ammianus Marcellinus the Historian, he made all the Haste he could, the better to conceal his Expedition from Sylvanus; but notwithstanding all his Diligence, the News of it was got before him to Cologn, where at his Arrival he found a great Body of Forces drawn together in Defence of Sylvanns. Upon this Ursicinus took other Measures, and endeavour'd to master his Designs by an outward show of Submission and Obedience. This procur'd him a kind Reception from Sylvanus, who admitted him to kiss the Purple, as the Custom was of faluting Emperors, and freely open'd all his Thoughts to him, consulting with him what was to be done for their mutual Security; and complaining with great Indignation, how vile, unworthy Persons were preferr'd to the Consulate, from which they had been hitherto most unjustly excluded, and treated with all Inhumanity, the one being stain'd with false Accusations of Treason, and the other hurry'd out of the East, and expos'd to the subtle Practices of his Enemies. This Security in Sylvanus was of great Ad25 anu

nge

25 if

Im-

mus.

ffor.

re at

ech.

hom

nade Ex-

1 his

1 to

ody

nus.

en-

WO

him

him

ing

s to

for reat

ore-

een

rith

Ac-

t of

his

reat d.

Advantage to Vrsicinas, and his Associates; for by degrees they wrought to effectually with fome of the Guards, that early one Morning they fet upon those who had the Charge of the Palace, and having kill'd em, dragg'd Sylvanus out of a Chappel, whither he Sylvanus had fled, and cut him in pieces. Thus fell a brave de-murder'd. ferving Captain, whom the crafty Malice of his Enemies, join'd with the Emperor's Credulity, had forc'd in his own Defence to usurp the Imperial Title: For tho' there was scarce a Man in the Empire deserv'd more of Constantius than himself, both for his Father's Services and his own, yet he knew all would be too little to oppose the natural Jealousie and Credulity of that Prince. Ammianus reports, that before he was flain in Gaul, the People at Rome cry'd out in the Grcus Maximus, without any known Motive, or certain Grounds, that Sylvanus was overthrown,

V. Constantius express'd an extraordinary Joy at this happy Deliverance, but made a very ill use of it, for he grew more Infolent and Proud from his Security; and, like Domitian, who quarrell'd with all that were better than himself, instead of rewarding Ursicinus for his extraordinary Service, he call'd him to a strict Account for some Mony which he fally pretended he had intercepted in Gaul; and proceeded with fuch Rage against Sylvanus his Friends, that tho' Proculus, a lean infirm Man, endur'd the Rack with a wonderful Constancy, without acculing or mentioning the Name of any one Person whatsoever, affirming on the contrary, that what Sylvanus did was purely out of Necessity, not Ambition; instancing, that when he paid the Army, five Days before he affum'd the Imperial Title, he then us'd the Name and Authority of Constantius, exhorting them all to be conftant in their Loyalty to him; which he would not have done, had he delign'd to fet up for himfelf,

Vol. I

ras

is (

cæf

nd

ng i

he fuli

ed

ettl

Mo

o hi

n a

atio

a ti

nd

Gau

fa

Ma

ear

nd

e a

elf

xpe

God'

Vorl

Thu

ixtl

ind

aa,

hin

with

Emp

Tan

Rui

nan

with

I

but have perverted the Treasure to his own Adectage: And tho' many more were ready to attest the as real matter of Fact, yet was Proculus and severe others condemn'd and executed.

These his cruel Proceedings against his own Subjects at home, were in some measure reveng'd upo him by his Enemies abroad; for the Barbarous No tions, in Contempt of the Peace lately fign'd, broke in upon Gaul, and laid all waste before 'em. exceedingly perplex'd the Emperor, who continued still at Milan, and was at that time unwilling to the out of Italy himself, and therefore he was of Necessity to repress the Barbarians by some other Hand. Upon this he thought of promoting Julian, the Brother of Gallus, to the Dignity of Casar, tho' he was therein oppos'd by his Sycophants that were about him; who, when he protested that he was unable to fustain the great Burden of the Empire alone, aftirm'd nothing was fo difficult but must of necessity give way to his extraordinary Courage and Conduct: And had certainly diverted him from his Defign, had not the Empress interpos'd; who, whether averse to long and dangerous Expeditions, or observing new Troubles arising in Pannonia, and that the King of Persia was preparing to make good his Claim upon Armenia and Mesopotamia, concluded it impossible for the Emperor to oppose so many Enemies at once, prevail'd with Constantins to pursue his Intentions.

Julian had been lately sent for out of Achaia, and had hitherto devoted himself wholly to Study: But now the Emperor, having call'd the Army together at Milan, mounted a Tribunal made for that purpose more conspicuous than ordinary, and plac'd Julian on his Right Hand; then he address'd himself to the Soldiers, telling em under what Necessities the Empire lay at present, and how much he stood in need of an Assistant; that therefore he

WAS

22 ÷ 25

roke

This

nu'd

Air

Ne-

and.

Bro-

Was

pout

e to

m'd

Way

And

not ong

ou-

27/14

enia

Em-

aild

aid,

dy:

for

and

ls'd

Ne-

uch

be

was

as inclinable, with their Approbation, to dignifie is Coufin Julian With the Title and Authority of Exfar, who was a young Man of approv'd Modesty nd extraordinary great Hopes. As he was proceedng the Army interrupting him, telling him it was he Will of God, and it should be so: Upon which Julian crefulian was cloath'd in the Purple Robe, and decla-atedCxfar, ed Casar. Then the Emperor, with a grave and ettl'd Countenance, saluted him with the Title of Most Loving Brother; telling him, it added much his Glory, that he could thus confer a Dignity, a manner Hereditary, to so near and dear a Reation; that he look'd on him now as his Associate the Empire, bound to share with him the Cares nd Labours that attended it; that he committed Gaul to his Protection, and plac'd him at the Head f a stout courageous Army; that being a Valiant Man himself, he made no doubt but he would apear such upon Occasion at the Head of his Troops, nd animate his Soldiers by his own Courage, and e a Witness of theirs; that he might promise himelf from him all the Love and Assistance he could xpect; concluding, that he made no doubt but by Ged's Assistance they should govern the Roman World with equal Piety, Prudence and Moderation. Thus Julian was created Cafar at Milan, on the fixth of November, in the Consulship of Arbetio nd Lollianus.

In a few Days after Julian was marry'd to Hele- and marna, the Emperor's Sifter; and having prepar'd all ry'd to Hehings requisite for his Journey, he set out for Gaul lena, the
with a small Train on the first of November, the Sister.
Emperor himself attending him part of his way. At Taurinum (or Trent) he was first inform'd of the Ruin of Cologne, a samous City in the second Gernany; which the Barbarians had taken and levell'd with the Ground. This seem'd an ill Omen to his first

D

first Undertaking, and made him fay, That all Advantage he was like to receive from his Proon, was to periff with more Vexation, and to a or I Ger

he t grea Wor

be r

cluc

grev

of t

ers,

his !

my,

the

Cou

on a

his

Wal

a Sal

my

and hand

prefe

tho

the turn

to h gine

was

Emp

louli

well lity o

as sh

effec

the (

GAUL

clusi

A. D. 356. His Exploits in Gaul.

a greater Noise at his Fall. At Vienna he was ceiv'd with the general Applause of the People, welcom'd him with all Expressions of Joy, and e brac'd him as their Deliverer. And when a blin old Woman, who ask'd what Prince was then me ing his Entrance, was answer'd it was Julian, I reply'd, Then this is he that is to restore the Ten ples of the Gods. Here he enter'd into his first Con fulate, the Emperor, now eight times Conful, bein his Partner: And before the Winter was well a vanc'd he receiv'd Intelligence that Augustodams (now Autun) a large City of great Antiquity, w befieg'd by the Barbarians, which he prepa'rd with all speed to relieve; but upon his Approach he foun the Enemy had rais'd the Siege, and were retire Whom with the light Part of his Army he purful with fuch Diligence, that he overtook 'em near Tri cassin, in Higher Dauphine, where they engag'd his in great Multitudes, and some of 'em he took, mo he kill'd, and the rest he put to Flight. Action he remov'd to Rheims, where the main Bod of his Army waited in a Readiness for him, under the Command of Marcellus and Ursicinus. From hence after he had held a Council of War, he march'd gainst the Enemy; who, taking the advantage of dark wet Night, and their Ignorance of the Way, fell upon his Rear, and had cut off two of his Le gions, had not the rest of his Army, alarm'd by the fudden Noise, turn'd back to their Rescue. made him more cautious in his Marches, and attemp fome of the Cities upon the Borders, where whe he had mafter'd 'em he might lye fecurely, and make Excursions from thence at his pleasure. order to which he advanc'd towards Brotomaguan en dinche in din

ody the second of a your Lead of a y

or Worms, which after a fuccessful Fight against the Germans, who endeavour'd to hinder his Deligns, he took, as he did several others that prov'd of great Service to him in the Course of the War. From Worms he remov'd to Colo; ne, which he caus'd to be re-built; and stay'd here long enough to conclude a Peace with the Kings of the Franks, who grew weary of the War, and deliver'd him up one of their strong Towns. After this he went to Triers, and from thence to Senone, where he took up his Winter-Quarters. Whilft he lay here, the Enemy, who being inform'd that a confiderable Part of the Army were absent, or dispers'd through the Country for convenience of their Quarters, came He is beon a fudden and laid Siege to the Town. He with fieg'd in Sehis Officers kept watch Day and Night upon the Walls, and tho' his Numbers were too weak to make a Sally, he defended the Place to long 'till the Enemy despairing to take the Town rais'd the Siege, And raises and drew off. All this while Marcellus lay near at hand, and yet he never stirr'd to relieve Cafar, or preserve the Place, which he ought to have done, tho' Tulian had not been in it. For this Omission the Emperor, as foon as he was inform'd of it, turn'd him out of his Commission, and confin'd him to his House. This Proceeding made Marcellus imagine himself highly injur'd by Cefar, on whom he was refolv'd to be reveng'd, by instilling into the Emperor's Ears fuch things as might raise his Jeawell the Malice of the one, and the supine Credulity of the other, sent Eutherius to answer such things he clears as should be objected against him; which he did so bimself. effectually, that Marcellus his Accusation fell to the Ground. Thus ended the War this Year in Gaul, doubtful in the Beginning, but in the Conclusion prosperous.

The

by Wo

he o ness

of v

Com

he i

mus

ter

bro

lian

mer whi

off t

ctis

vail'

Miss

endu

they

Man

conv

ny re

Barb

y wi

draw

Ord

the]

em v

their

and v

Defig

his o

in w

the G

passin

7

A.D. 357.

The Year following, being the 21st of Constanti. us his Reign, he and Julian continu'd Confuls, the Emperor residing still at Milan; where he published an Edict, restraining the Arbitrary Proceedings of the Provincial Officers in the Impolition and Levy. ing of Taxes; allowing those call'd Extraordinary never to be impos'd but by the Prafectus Pratorio himself, and that only when there was an absolute unavoidable Necessity for it, enjoining him to acquaint the Emperor that he had impos'd fuch a Tax; that what was done might be confirm'd by the Imperial Authority, or receive such Alterations as were judg'd convenient, before it was collected.

us takes a

Constanti- VI. After this the Emperor, finding he had little Progress to do, resolv'd to visit Rome, where the Senate and all the People came forth to meet him, and fo great was the Confluence, that he thought the whole World was there affembl'd together. He made his Entry in a Golden Chariot, which was adorn'd with fuch a multitude of sparkling Gems, that it rivall'd the Lustre of the Sun. The Dragons embroider'd upon Purple wanton'd in the Air about him, curling their Heads from the Ends of the Staves that glifter'd with Pearl and precious Stones, and when they wav'd to and fro in the Winds, they feem'd alive by their Hiffings, and Tortuofity of their Tails When he came to the Roftra, he was amaz'd at the fight of the Forum, that Demonstration of the ancient Power of the Inhabitants, and spake to the No bility in the Senate House, and made a Speech to the People from the Tribunal. He was wonderfully delighted with the Place, but what he most admired was the Temple of Jupiter Tarpeius, the public Baths, the Amphitheatre, the Pantheon, Pompeys Theatre, and other magnificent Ornaments of the Eternal City, as Ammianus calls it, and as it is stild ni.

the

h'd

of

vy-

ary

orio

ute

ac-

h a

by

ions

d.

etle

and

reat

orla

otry

uch

the

up-

ling

gli-hey

live

ails

the

all

No

the

ully

mi

olick

pey's chis

Lild

by

by the Emperors in most of their Edicts: In a Word, he was so amaz'd with what he beheld, that he complain'd of Fame, which either through Weakpels or Malice had given a lame imperfect Account of what related to Rome, tho' in other Matters she constantly exceeds the Truth; and desiring to add fomething of his own to the Ornaments of the City. he intended to erect an Obelisk in the Circus Maximus, which was done accordingly towards the latter end of the Year.

The Empress Eusebia had, in this Progress to Rome, brought under the show of Friendship Helena fulian's Wife along with her; and as the had formerly brib'd the Midwife to destroy a Boy, of which she was just deliver'd in Gaul, by cutting off too much of the Navel String, fo now the practis'd with fo much skill upon her, that the prevail'd with her to take something which made her Miscarry; for being barren her self, the could not endure she should be a Mother; and so careful were they, faith the Historian, to deprive that Valiant Man of Issue; who notwithstanding the many Inconveniences he labour'd under in Gaul, had in ma- Julian's ny respects been very successful against the Enemy. farther Barbatio, General of the Foot, was sent out of Ita- Progress in y with a Supply of 25000 Men, and Julian had drawn out his Troops Garrison'd about Senona, in Order to join him, or fall in separate Bodies upon the Enemy, and try if it were possible to restrain em with doubled Forces, and confine 'em within their Bounds, for they had now pass'd the Rhine, and were advancing up into the Country. Julian's Defign was to enclose 'em, if he could, between his own Army and that commanded by Barbatio, in which he succeeded according to his Defire; for the Germans, not with standing this additional Strenth, passing between the two Camps, in their roving

Dz

man-

ch

роп

ific

iffi

e v ians

hat

emb

luct

Tho

Cou

ad I

ad

nani

Cou

he

her

zain

aut

eta

Vo

he h vere

lem

Ene

rea

he

hard

my

were valia

ten

grea

of t

he

nd

inu

T

manner proceeded as far as Lyons, with an Intent furprize it; but they were fo warmly received b the Inhabitants, that judging it impossible to the the City, they wasted the Country round about, an were returning with a great Booty; when Talia who had notice of what was done, detach'd three strong Parties of Horse to three several Places, by which he concluded the Barbarians must return who accordingly were all cut off, except fuch as a scap'd where Barbatio's Post was assign'd him; for Barbatio, as well in this as every thing elfe, labour all he cou'd to oppose and ruin Casar, and to thought the Instructions he receiv'd from the Em peror were to that purpose, who was faid to have fent Julian not fo much to relieve the Province of Gaul, as to expose him to such imminent Danger under which he must of necessity miscarry; so the when he demanded feven Boats of Barbatio to make Bridges over into some Islands upon the Rhine where feveral of the Barbarians had fecur'd then felves, he having notice of his Design burnt then all, as he did fuch Corn as had been of course pro yided, which came his way; for having taking ha to himself, he constantly burnt the rest; and after had receiv'd a notable Defeat from the Enemy no Baste, who took the greatest part of his Baggar and pursu'd him as far as the Rauraci, he, as if the Summer's Expedition was over, fent his Men int Winter-Quarters, and return'd to Court, where h perfuaded the Emperor that his Army had bee Victorious, and did all the ill Offices he could to Cafar; who, notwithstanding, pursu'd his Delign with Vigour, and having coafted along the Rhin came to the Three Taberna, www Zaberne, a For lately demolish'd by the Enemy, which he though fit to rebuild, the better to curb 'em, and hinder their Irruptions into Gaul. This Work he finish foone talian lian line

b

un

is e for 1

Em

hav e o

iger tha

hem hem pro hall er he near

e h

beer

do

ign bine

For

igh ide (h)

one

poner than was expected, and stor'd it with Proissions for a whole Year, which he got with much ifficulty out of the Enemy's Country. Bur whilft e was bufily employ'd in this Work, the Barbaians, animated with their Success, and concluding hat Cefar himself was run away through Fear, afembled in great Numbers together, under the Conuct of fix Kings, and encamp'd near Strasbourg. Tho' at length they found that Julian was still in the Country, yet being inform'd by a Deferter that he ad not above thirteen thousand Men with him, they ad the Arrogance to fend in a menacing, imperious nanner, and commanded him instantly to quit the Country he had invaded, which was purchas'd by he Valour and Conduct of their Fore-fathers, oherwise that they would denounce open War arainst him. Julian, not mov'd with the Message, out laughing at the Infolence of the Barbarians, letain'd the Messengers 'till he had compleated the Work, and then march'd directly against 'em; when he had first by a set Speech encourag'd his Men, who were of their own Inclinations forward enough, and demanded with one Voice to be lead on against the Enemy; who, inform'd of their Approach, stood in readiness to receive them. The Romans, during he whole Course of this War, had never been so hardly put to it as now; for besides that the Encmy were more than double their Number, they were headed by Chnodomarius and Serapio, the most valiant of their Kings, affisted by five others, and ten more of the Royal Families, together with great Number of the Nobility.

The Right Wing of the Roman Army confifted his Victory of their Cavalry, which the Enemy oppos'd with over the he choice of their Horse, lining their Ranks up Barbarians nd down with some Foot, who creeping and in toratum. inuating themselves here and there, as occasion re-

D 4

quir'd.

quir'd, stabb'd their Horses, and put tem at fi into a great Confusion, and at last to an absolu Flight; nor could all the Rhetorick Julian Master of persuade 'em, for a long time, to ral and charge a fecond time upon the Enemy, were by this time fallen with great Violence tipe the Foot, and had cut themselves a Passage through the Legions, 'till they had pierc'd up as far as the Body of those call'd Primani, who being the choice of the Roman Infantry took Advantage of the Rashness, and put 'em to a disorderly and blood Flight. Many of 'em, unable to fly fast enoug for the Heaps of the dead Bodies that choak'd a the Way, ventur'd to take the Rhine, wherein mo of 'em were drown'd, kill'd and taken. Among the rest Chnodomarius, endeavouring to pass the Water was pursu'd and forc'd to yield; they that took him brought him to Cafar, of whom he begg'd Pardo with great Submission, which being granted his he was fent to Rome, where he dy'd some time ter of a Lethargy. Of the Enemy fix thousand dy'd upon the Place, besides vast Numbers of the that perish'd in the River. The Romans lost to more than two hundred forty three Men. After this fo unexpected a Victory the Army faluted Fullar by the Title of Augustus, but he absolutely refuse it, and reprov'd the Soldiers for it, telling "em 'twa an Honour belonging to none of right but Conftan tins; who upon the News of his Success attributed this, as he did all the rest, to his own fortunate Conduct, as if he had been fighting himself at the Head of his Armies,

Julian, after the Battel, sent away his Prisonen and all his Booty to Metz, whilst he himself advanc'd to Mayence, where he built a Bridge over the River, and fell upon the Germans in their own Country, which he laid waste by way of Retallation

TOD,

Ch

ion

pero

Wit

cou

coul

Tru

they

in w

he l

then

ters

pref the abou

two fort

On

lian

with mid

they

way

Me

Par

fma

men

man

is th

nia, let

my

very a B

exp

plex

apprela by ion, and began to repair a Fort to which the Emperor Trajan had formerly given his own Name. With this the Barbarians were so exceedingly difcourag'd, that they fent and su'd for a Peace, which could not be obtain'd upon any Terms, but a Truce was granted them for ten Months, which they oblig'd themselves inviolably to maintain, and in which time Julian concluded the Fortifications, he had begun would be finish'd; returning from thence in order to put his Men into Winter-Quarters he was forc'd to chastise some Franks, who presuming upon his Absence in Germany, had, to the number of fix hundred, rifled all the Country about Rheims, and hearing of his Return feiz'd on two Forts which had been difmantled, and therein fortify'd themselves in the best manner they could. One of these Castles, standing upon the Mense, Julian besieg'd, and tho' they defended themselves with great Obstinacy for fifty Days together in the midst of Winter, yet he press'd 'em so hard that they were forc'd to furrender, and were all fent away to the Emperor; after which he dispers'd his Men into Winter-Quarters, and went himself to Paris, where he consulted how to improve the small time of the Truce to the Ease and Refreshment of the exhausted Provinces.

cell heir add ugl ugl the ter

in

don hilm and and note no

his is d

VII. The Year following the Quadi under the Com- A. D. mand of Vitrodorus, and the Sarmate led by Zizais their King, broke with great Violence into Panno- The Quadi nia, upon which the Emperor early in the Spring invade the fet forward from Sirmium with a very good Ar- Empire, my; and tho' the Danube was at that time swoln very much by reason of a sudden Thaw, he made a Bridge of Boats and pass'd the River. This unexpected Diligence in the Emperor very much perplex'd the Barbarians who were in no manner prepar'd

Ch

reat

mai

oo em

her

did,

em,

Fac

y ·

pass

atte

nen

nea

and

the

Pea

Ta

tha

mo

con

upo

tow

ing

gre

the

but

luti

avo

Th

dra

the

ftro

fwi

by

on

the

the

par'd to receive him, fo that they who were belt ble to defend their Country, instead of refishing to Enemy thifted for themselves, and left their Friend and Relations expos'd to the Fury of the Roma Soldiers, by which means all that Part of Sarman which lay nearest to Pannonia Secunda was entirely ruin'd. This at length provok'd the Inhabitants is far, that being affished by their Friends the Quadithey try'd their Fortune in several Rencounters, but were as often defeated. This made 'em fo deferous of Peace, that they were content to deliver up themselves, their Wives, Children, and Territorie into the Emperor's Hands to purchase it, which however they obtain'd upon cheaper Terms, being only oblig'd to restore the Prisoners they had taken and for the future submit to his Commands.

but are supprest by Constantius.

> This Act of Clemency towards Zizais and his Affociates, had fuch Operation upon their Neighbours, that those of the Quadi who inhabited be yond the Mountains, and the Sarmata next adjoining to them, in a just Sense of the many Outrages they had committed, came in the greatest Humillty to fue for a Pardon and Peace, which they obtain'd upon giving up their Hostages chosen by Lot out of the Sons of the Nobility, and with them fuch Prisoners as they had taken. There yet remain'd the Sarmate Limigantes, those who being Slaves had disposses'd their Masters, as we observe before, who had committed fuch outragious Villanies as call'd aloud for Punishment; however the Emperor intended to deal more gently with them than they deferv'd, and only to remove 'em farther off, that they might not be tempted by Opportunity so often to infest the Empire. Upon appearance of the Roman Army they pretended an extreordinary Fear, as if they expected nothing but Destruction: They begg'd Pardon, and promis'd in yearly

end

rely solo adi, but left-

· up

Ties

uch

ing

cen,

三路等多字字 ob-

ot en

ing

v'd

il.

he

em

ner

tu-

ea rive in

SHIN SHIN

Portia

men udyad

Lrowblet.

Cencions

& Sungar

Fro 12 5015

Commissed

rearly Tribute both of Men and Mony, and to remain subject to the Empire. Constantins, who gave oo great Credit to their gentle Behaviour, order'd em to come over to the hither Bank of the River, there to be inform'd of his Pleafure, which they did, but rather to dispute his Commands than obey em, and to let him know they were not afraid to Face his Army. The Emperor observing their furly Temper, so dispos'd of his Men as to encompass them, and prevent their Designs should they attempt any Violence; then standing on an Iminence rais'd on purpose, that he might be feen and heard, attended by fome of his Principal Officers, and his Guards about him, he gently admonish'd them to be quiet. But they mixt their Desires of Peace with a fort of Stratagem, for they cast their Targets at a great diffance from them, as in Jeft, that going to take them up, they might gain the more Ground, and give the better Onset. Night coming on, the Army with Banners difplay'd fell upon them, whereupon they made with great Fury towards the Throne; but the Soldiers speedily forming themselves into the shape of a Wedge, with great Violence remov'd them, and then flaughter'd them like fo many Wild Beafts caught in the Toil; but they fell with invincible Constancy and Resolution, asking neither for Pardon nor Quarter, but avowing in Death they deferv'd a better Fortune, This Execution being over, the enrag'd Soldiers dragg'd the Relations of those who were Slain out of their Huts, and without regard to Sex or Age destroy'd all alike. Some that escap'd attempted to fwim the River, but were either drown'd or kill'd by the Pursuers. The rest of these Limigantes upon Security of the publick Faith, came down from the Mountains, and flock'd with all their Relations to the Roman Camp, from whence they were removed by their

nd

eri

o i ee

nd

vit

Pro

who

eve

qua Ex

he

der

ceir

bac

that

ind

hat

he

he i

be c ry.

per

Ma

bef

left

ftan

form

For

tes;

for

An

wh

Pla

Du

cinn

their own Conset to other Places, where for some time they liv'd in Peace and Security, but at length return'd to their former Fierceness and Barbarity. After this the Emperor, for these his Atchieve ments call'd Sarmaticus by his Soldiers, return'd to Sirmium in Triumph; from thence he remov'd to wards Constantinople, the better to prepare against A. D. Sapor the King of Persia, who for some time had 359. laid Claim to Armenia and Mesopotamia, and was now resolv'd to make it good by force of Arms,

The King of Perfia begins new Troubles.

VIII. He being now in perfect Peace with the Princes his Neighbours, and observing the Distract. ons of the Empire, thought it a proper time to purfue his Pretentions. Constantius was wholly guided by Enfebrus the Eunuch, a proud, factious, intriguing Courtier, who liften'd more to his own Avarice, Ambition or Revenge, than his Mafter's Honour or Profit. Ursicinus at that time command. ed in the East, and was the fittest Man in the Em-Command, pire for that Post, in Case of a War. Eusebius had long been contriving his Ruin, as being the only Person who was either Independent of him, or else fcorn'd his Support; and herein he succeeded so far that he was recall'd to Court under a Pretence of Urficinus recall'dfrom his fucceeding Barbatio, who had been lately Beheaded, and Sabiand Sabinianus a decrepit old Man, every way unnianus sent fit for such an Employment, was sent in his Place; in his room.

who making what hafte he could to be poffes'd of his new Dignity, produc'd the Emperor's Letters to his Predecessor at Cilicia; the Substance of which being known abroad, created great Uneasiness in the People, who judg'd themselves exposs'd to manifest Ruin, being depriv'd of their Guardian at so nice and dangerous a Conjuncture; on the other Hand the King of Persia was resolv'd not to omit so is vourable an Opportunity, but march with all speed and

rity.

icvo-

d to

to-

Main

had

Was

the

adi

pur-

ded

in-

IWC

er's

and,

m-

had

nly

elle

far of ed,

-חנו

ce;

of to

ich

he est ice nd

facd nd and feize on those Countries, which were now goern'd by so unsit a Commander; being prompted o it by the Advice of Antoninus, who had lately een a Servant to the Emperor, but being injur'd and oppress'd by the great Officers had withdrawn with all his Family, and thrown himself into the protection of Sapor; to whom he discover'd the whole State of the Army, of what Numbers the everal Parties consisted, of what Strength, where quarter'd, and who commanded them in times of Expedition; as likewise whence, where, and how hey were furnish'd with Arms and Provision.

In the mean time Vrscinus, pursuant to his Orders, was returning into Italy, but in Thrace he reteiv'd Letters from Constantius, requiring him to haste back into Mesopotamia, but without any Guard, for hat the Power was now entrusted in another's Hand; and this was contriv'd on purpose by his Enemies, hat the new Commander might have the Honour of the Action, if the King of Persia miscarry'd, but if he fucceeded in his Expedition, the Ignominy might be charg'd upon Orsicinus, as a Traitor to his Country. However he return'd in Obedience to the Emperor's Command, and tho' he found Sabinianus a Man of a mean Spirit and narrow Soul, he took the best Care he could, and diligently fortify'd Nisibis, lest the Enemy should attack it unawares. Understanding the Persians had pass'd the Tigris, he with some Forces travers'd the Country, burnt up all the Forage, and fortify'd the Bank on this fide Euphrates; so that the Persians could neither find Subsistance for their Army, nor a Ford to pass the River, 'till Antoninus conducted 'em more towards the Right, where they found Grass and Corn enough, and a Place towards the Head of the River that was fordable. During these Marches and Counter-marches Orsicinus by chance met with Antoninus, whom he reviled Traitor. Antoninus, instead of endeavouring to co ceal himself, leap'd from his Horse, took the Time which as a Badge of the greatest Honour had be presented him, from his Head, bow'd himself to the Ground, call'd him Patron and Lord, and begg him to pardon him; confessing he had embraced dishonourable Course, but was necessitated to it to the Avarice and Oppression of some, against who neither your Power, said he, Virtue or Anthonican protest you; and then withdrew to his Pan with all the Signs of Submission and Respect.

Not long after this two Roman Castles were surrender'd to Sapor, who in prosecution of his Design King Sapor came the third Day after, and sate down before a besieges A-mida, the Metropolis of Mesoporamia, much beautiful.

tify'd and enlarg'd by Constantius; which he exped ed would have been deliver'd up to him immediate ly, and not have hinder'd him in the Pursuit of those Councils had been suggested to him by As toninus, concluding those within would not dare to hold out, when once they beheld him in all hi Pomp of Majesty at the Gate: But was highly in cens'd when he found they were fo far from receive ing him with the Honour he expected, that they al faulted him with their Javelins from the Wall, on of which was directed to well that it cut off parto his Robe: Upon which he exclaim'd against then with as much Indignation as if they had facrilege oully robb'd a Temple, in that they had prefum's to offer Violence to him that was Lord of fo many Kings and Nations, and therefore finding upon a fo cond Trial that they were inflexible, he refolv'd's once to destroy the Town and the Inhabitants, and accordingly prepar'd for a vigorous Attack; while they within, who thought of nothing but how to die with most Honour, prepar'd for as vigorous

De

Def

Bra

The

ron

fuch

Yea

ver'

bury

we mea

ubj

ciall

and

hat

o ra

Tre

remo

had

nim

of d nour

Itake

ction

Arm

who

unul

ee t ag'c

hey

Wre

oute

had !

Trav

am

pon

ook

T

Defence. Never was Siege carry'd on with more Bravery, nor fo many Men loft in fo thort a time. The Befieg'd, befides the Difficulties they met with from without, labour'd with as great within; for fuch a noisom Stench arose at that hot Season of the Year from the multitude of dead Bodies which cover'd the Streets, and which they had not time to bury, that it bred a devouring Pestilence, which wept away almost as many as the Sword. In the Urficinus mean time Ursicinus, tho' much disdaining to be desiring to subjected to the Command of another Person, especially one so unworthy as Sabinianus, however fent and advis'd him to bring the Velites into the Field, hat they might divert the Enemy, and force him o raise the Siege, or at least distress him in his Trenches, and intercept him by Stratagems as he remov'd from Place to Place. But Sabinianus, who is oppos'd by had privately agreed with those who had promoted Sabinianus. him never to give his Predecessor the Opportunity of doing any thing that would redound to his Hohour, tho' the Provinces in the mean time lay at stake, absolutely deny'd him, alledging his Instructions were to do nothing that might endanger the Army.

the season of the season seaso

t d e to

y in ein

y af

OD

rto

hen

egi-m'

nany

2 10

da

and

hill

w to

us I De

There were in Amida two Legions of Gauls, who had formerly ferv'd under Magnentius. They. inused to the Fatigues of Sieges, were impatient to ee themselves immur'd up, whilst their Enemies ag'd with so much Fury abroad; especially when hey beheld from the Walls a multitude of miserable Wretches led into Slavery, whom Sapor had forc'd out of the feveral Forts in the Country, whither they had flock'd for Safety, many of whom, spent with Travel, and unable to proceed any further, they pamstring'd, and left behind on the Roads: Where A defepon, grown too unruly for their Commanders, they rate Atook the Advantage of a dark mifty Night, and if tempt of 1 ear

For

rth

alf

ere

S

eth

rere

late

or t om

nwa

o le n h

t hi

igns

le R

he

n e

yet t

ers,

the J

who

prou

ted 1

renti Con

I

torio

reice

fend

fu'd out at a Postern, arm'd with Swords and B tel-Axes, having first fortify'd themselves by the Prayers, and then proceeded with fo much Caut that they were in hopes of reaching the King's Qua ters without Discovery; but falling of necessity u on the Guards, whom they cut in pieces, the Noise of the wounded quickly alarm'd the Body-Guard which put these daring Gants to a stand, who fine ing themselves frustrated of what they chiefly aim at, retir'd in the best order they cou'd out of the Lines, with their Faces still turn'd towards the En my, and by degrees recover'd the City with the Loss of 400 of their Company, besides those the were wounded, having narrowly mis'd killing the Persian King, tho' surrounded by an Army of 100000 fighting Men. The rifing Sun discover'd to the Persians the mighty Loss they had sustain'd; seven of the principal Nobility were found among the Slain, which rais'd a general Lementation through out the Camp, the King himself having the great est Reason to bewail the Loss of his nearest Friend and Relations. This made him push on the Sieg with more Vigour, and oblig'd the Basieg'd to defend themselves with more obstinate Resolution; and thus Rage combating with Despair occasion'd the Loss of many brave Men on both sides. But length the very Instruments of their Defence redu ced the Belieg'd to the last Extremity. One of the Mounts they had rais'd to oppose the Persian Tow ers remov'd, as with an Earthquake, and fell upo the Wall, bearing it down into the Ditch, where ferv'd as a Bridge to the Enemy, and gave 'em' large Entrance. The greatest Part of the Garrie were by this time kill'd or difabl'd, and yet the that were left flock'd in great Numbers to ma good the Breach, tho' at the certain Hazard of the Lives. But the Vigour and Alacrity of the Par

Amida

100

the the

th

the igh-

eg: de-

200

the

at

che Non e m

110

King, who exposed himself equally with the eanest Soldier, bore down all before him. The pitch was fill'd with dead Bodies, which thereby forded a larger Accels to the Town. When n rther Relistance could be made, the Defendants alf dead already with their Watching and Labour ere flaughter'd like Sheep, without any Regard had Sex or Age. Some of the most healthy got toether, and made as resolute an Opposition as they vere able, resolving to sell their Lives at as dear a Late as they could. But Ammianus our Historian vith two or three more afcap'd, and got fafe to Orficinus, who was then on his way to Antioch Seor having ras'd the City, as he threaten'd, return'd and deomeward in an outward Show of Triumph, but frojd. swardly afflicted at the Loss of so many Men, for o less than thirty thousand are faid to have perish's n his Side before the Town; which, confidering t hinder'd him from pursuing those advantagious Deigns suggested to him by Antoniaus, gave him litle Reason to brag of his Expedition.

Tho' Ursicinus had done all he could, without Ursicinus he Concurrence of the Commander in chief, who seem'dat n every thing oppos'd him, to relieve the Tover the Loss of that, and several other heinous Matters, were with all Bitterness alledg'd against him at his Return to Court, whither he was fent for under the Pretence of Succeeding Barbario, The Emperor, whose Ears were always open to Accusations, the brought against his most faithful Servants, committed the Hearing of the Matter to Arbetio and Flerentins, with Charge to enquire into Ursicinus his Conduct, and how dwids came make destroy'd.

The Allegations brought against him were so notoriously salie, that they would not for Shame but reject 'em; and yet so much were they assaid of offending Enseitus, that they durst not lay the Load

13

ha

W

m, hic

ress

ly a

hic

ard

SA

g / ofe

nce

, a

e re

now

y th us I

, h offi

he l

f h e h

CC

o n

lad

hou orc

n a

eiv

hat

hat

near uch

hen

er

art he

how

as they ought, upon the base Cowardise of Sab nus, and therefore declining any farther Enquir to that Affair, they infifted only on trifling Ma that were foreign to the Purpole. Orsicinus, wort ly provok'd at fuch corrupt Proceedings, told boldly, That tho' they pass'd it over with so mi Contempt, the Thing was of too great a Confequen to be neglected: That it defery'd the Emperor own Examination, who could not but feverely pu nish so foul a Miscarriage, in whomsoever he show find it; and forefaw that fo long as he fuffer'd his felf thus to be govern'd by Eunuchs, tho' he fhor go himself in Person next Spring with an Arm into the Field, yet should he not be able to pr with very malicious Aggravations, which so high incens'd him, that he broke off the Inquisition, at permitting those things to be expos'd to the Ligh which had been industriously hid from his Know ledge; and turn'd Ursicinus out of his Place, con fining him to a retir'd Life in the Country.

and confined to a private Life.

IX. In the mean time Julian proceeded with won derful Success against the Germans inhabiting of both Sides of the Rhine, and in the end forc'd 'en to accept of a Peace, upon fuch Conditions as a thought fit to prescribe. And hearing the Piets an Scots were making Incursions into the Roman Terri tories in Great Britain, he sent thither his Lieutenin Lupicinus, who drove 'em back into the Northe Parts of the Island, and settled the Subjects of the Empire in Peace and Tranquility.

These Exploits, which added much to Cafar Reputation, were no way acceptable to the jealou The Empe- Temper of Constantins, who thought those new Ac rer jealous cessions to the Empire were so other than Dimin tions to his Honour and Security. He remember ow dangerous Galles had like to have provideto m, and look'd on him as still living in Julian; for hich Reason he greatly defined to weaken and open els him, which could be done no way fo effectuly as by recalling part of his Army from him, for hich he had now a fair Opportunity, and, loutardly at leaft, a very just Pretences and nesting Saper, perfifting still in his Resolution of conquere g Mesoperamia, had passid the Tigris, and laid ofe Siege to Singara, which, after a vigorous Dence, he took by Affault; as he did likewise Bezaba strong Fort situated on a Hill, the Walls of which e repair'd, and put into it a good Garrison, well nowing of what Confequence it was to either Parthat were in Possession of it: And if his victoriaus Arms had not met with some Resistance at Or-, he had undoubtedly over-ran all Mesopotamia; thich Constanting was in Interest and Dury bound, if offible, to prevent, and therefore fent to Julian for fends for he best Soldiers and most experienc'd Commanders part of his f his Army, together with all the Auxiliary Troops Army; e had rais'd in Gaul and Germany, that by fuch an ccession of Strength he might be the better able o make Head against the Persians. These Forces ad been rais'd by Falian, upon a Promise that they hould never be oblig'd to pass the Alps, nor be orc'd to ferve in remote Parts, which their Officers n a submissive manner represented to him. " Herei eiv'd 'em with wonderful Civility, inform'd 'em hat he was as much diffatisfy'd as themselves, but hat it was the Emperor's Pleafure, which by all neans was to be obey'd. He highly commended uch of them as were known to him, remember'd hem of the glorious Things they had perform due ler his Conduct, express d'a great Unwillingness to art with fuch worthy Fellow-Soldiers; however in he Conclusion gently advis'd them chearfully to (nb-

cu

Ac

m

OW

LES

aio vit

Fer

m tor

14/5

Mu

ive

ais

elv

5 2

2 1

Me

ou

nav

rice

Rei

0 eig Co

KDO

to submit to the Emperor's Command, and signatheir Valour in foreign Parts, for which they me be assured of very honographe Rewards: And whe had finish'd his Speech, he invited them all

Supper, where he entertain'd em with much T derness and Affection, as well as Magnificences T Condescension prevail'd so far with Men, who we before unwilling to be banish'd in a manner for pos'd the Honour they were bestowing upon his and reminded 'em of their Duty; but when he four they were firm to their Purpose, and that all could fay made no Impression on em, he with much their Native Country, and were now resolv'd new to part with so obliging a Commander, that the had not Patience to stay till Morning, but after the were dismiss'd from Supper they communicated to my, and declare Julian Emperor.

Thoughts to one another, and return'd in a men cing manner to the Palace, which they surrounded and with a rude tumultuous Noise saluted Julian's the Title of Angustus. He at first outwardly of feeming Reluctancy was at length compell'd to a cept of the Imperial Title.

A. D.

For some time after this he kept himself retired without any Regard to the publick Affairs, as if he were displeas'd and uneasie at what was done; he when he found the Soldiers began to be in an Uproar, and how it was spread abroad in the Canthat he was secretly murder'd, which threw 'em into a Flame, he show'd himself publickly among 'em like an Emperor, and from a Tribunal erection purpose, he address'd himself to 'em, as his maner was, in a very lively Speech, bidding 'em member with how much Virtue and Sobrier, had liv'd among them; with how much Diligest Pain and Patience he had contributed to the man Victories they had obtain'd over the Burbarian how he had ever been a Sharer with them is all the

Pour

H

to i tir

iff

3

Cap

m ech

m mer

yh

L

abours whils in the depth of Winter, when others as'd from War, they push'd on their Fortunes asinft the Germans, and conquer those, who 'rill ben bad been invincible. But above all, that glorius Day was never to be forgotten, which in a reat measure bless'd the Gauls with a perpetual aberty, purchas'd by sheir own Valeur, and the derit of their Arms in that memorable Bassel near rgentoratum where whole Tarrents of their Enesios fell with Violence upon them, but were received with Such a God-like Virgue, that to avoid the Terror of their Swards they committed themselves the Dangers of the Deep, and fled from Death nto the Arms of Defruction : He appeal d so em if his Example did not lead em on to Kitory, for which he sugged there where Death was uliest, and Danger appeard in every Shape: He fur'd 'em that chefe sheir great Deferts would ive in the Month of Fame to late Posterity, epecially if they took care to defend him they had ais'd, and windicate that Authority which was f their own Creations for his part he was reolv'd to Rule with Justice and Moderation, that nover Should be faid Valour west unrewarded n his Days, or Ambition seiz'd on what was due to Merita represent I and The Lander being to he

A Speech confishing of such popular Topicks tould not but be acceptable to the Soldier, who having higherto received no Reward for all his Services, assured himself mighty Advantages from a Reign that promised such material Regulations.

After this, Julian began again to apply himself to the Affairs of States, and Exercise of the Soveeign Authority, making such Alterations in the Court and the Army as he judged convenient; and knowing how much Constanting would be displeased t what was done, he dispatch'd Pentaltins and En-

E 3

therius,

Cou

ain

ers

tor

eon

Fuli

ers,

of t

He

em

out

not

o hûn

of (but dor

gust

wh

and aid

En and

an Co

In tha

A

th

In

th

W

W L

> 0 V

> fi

Coun

therius, two of his Principal Officers, with I to him, in which he represented the great L and imminent Dangers he had undergone in the cution of the Service he impos d upon hims with what readiness he had embrac'd it. How Army, Senfible of his high Deferts, and the H Thips they lay under in being fore'd to quit Native Country, and ferve in Foreign Parts, compell'd him to accept of that; which he of nately refus detill they threaten'd him with Di and had given him reason to think they would wested the same Honour in some other when had dispatch'd him. That he own'd he one Advancement entirely to him, and should make an ungrateful use of the Power which now given him. However he gave him to frand that he could not approve of his last On that Gaul was so far from being able to sond of her Natives against the Persians, that she f rather in need of Affiftance from the other Pro ces, being continually harraft deither with For Invasions or Domestick Tumules. He conclude all with an earnest Defire of his Friend hips told him a mutual Love and good Understand between Princes was the only certain Found of a mutual Prosperity. The Emperor was upon his Expedition against the Persians, and advanc'd as far as Cafarra, where the Ambaffa from Julian found him. D Upon his first real At which, the Letters he fell into fo great a Passion, that the Conflanti- who brought em were in fear of their Lives drove 'em out of his Presence, and commanded e no more to appear upon fo Prefumptuous a Me fage before him; then he confider'd with his felf whether he had best proceed in his Expedition against the Persians, or ourn back and chastises

Rebellious Kinfman; after some Deliberations wol us is enrag'd.

councils prevail'd, and he pursu'd his Expedition a ainst the Persians. He dismised Julian's Messent ers without any Answer, but sent Leanus his Quat for into Gaul presently after with Letters to him. conas being arriv'd at Paris, was kindly receiv'd by Julian, to whom he deliver'd the Emperor's Leters, whilfthe was upon the Tribunal, make Prefence of the Army, at which he was not a little pleas'd. He order'd 'em to be read openly to the whole Afembly, who for fome time liften'd with Patience; but when they came to that Part wherein he admonish'd and exhorted him, if he had any regard o his own Security, and that of his Friends, to numble himself, and be facisfy'd with the Dignity of Cafar, which he permitted him still to enjoy, but disapprov'd and annull'd whatever else had been done, they cry'd out with one Voice, Julian Auoustus; alledging it was unlawful in an to revoke what had been ratify'd by the Army and the People; and that they were relolved to fland by their Election. With this Answer Leonas return'd to the Emperors to give him an Account of his Embassies and Julian, who was unwilling, as yet, to come to an open Rupture, dispatch'd other Ambastadors to Constantins, by whom he affur'd him of his good Intentions and Zeal for his Service. After which, that he might keep himself and his Army still in Action, the march'd into Germany, and having pass'd the Rhine, he fell fuddenly upon the Authuarii, the Inhabitants of Franconia, a turbulent uneafic People, that had lately made feveral Incursions into Gant, who being not prepared for to unexpected a Visit were eafily fundurd, rland foroid to submit to such Laws as the Conqueror thought fit to impose upon them, by which means he made a fufficient Provision for the Peaceonf the Empire on that fide; from thonce repalling the River, he reinforc'd the Garrisons

th

A'e

Me

His ino

oun

01 la

CI

d

an lf

t

n'

re

u nal if

ul

hei

An

0

0

Ete

0 8

nat s i ess

he

ity

ng

hat

inti

Garrisons upon the Borders, came to the Rear where he recover'd some Places out of the Enem Hands, fortify'd em, and return'd by the way Besungen to Vienna upon the Rhône, where he co tinu'd a great part of the Winter. About this tis Helena, Ju. his Wife Helena dy'd, without leaving any Charles and Charle

Helena, Ju. his Wife Helena dy'd, without leaving any Clian's Wife, dren behind her, which was imputed chiefly to dies; Practices of the Empres Enfabra, as has been before observ'd.

and the Empress Euschia. Nor did Enfebia her self long survive her, he dy'd whilst the Emperor lay at Antioch. She was Woman of a great Capacity, and well acquainted with the Languages and Sciences. Her Wit in Conduct were so prevailing as to gain her an Abblute Power over her Husband, which she unfortunately abus'd in Defence of Arianism, a Heresia he had suck'd in with her Milk, and to which she gave her Protection during her whole Life. And here it will not be amiss to give the Render a short Account of the State the Church was in during this Emperor's Reign.

The State
of the Church under Constantius.

Christianity had, from the time of Conf. the Great, met with wonderful Encouragement in was propagated in all Parts; it was profesid in Perfia, Armenia, in Georgia, and among the Me Inhabitants of Mount Cancasus, towards the C pian Sea, It had been planted in India, where had some Churches, a Bishop, and Multitudes of Profesfors, so that the Promise to the Son was a ready in a great measure accomplish'd, That h (bould have the Heathen for his Inheritance, and the utmost Parts of the Earth for his Possession; but mong this good Seed which the Holy Spirit Truth had fown in fo plentiful a measure, the Ene my had mingl'd fome Tares, which multiply'd with a fudden Encrease, to the great Danger of Christie anity, and Scandal of the Faithful; and the Church ate

ulk

z sh

16 2

with

riffi

arch

may

om them who profess'd themselves her Fathers onsessor and Desenders, than the open and avow'd lalice of her most implacable Persecutors.

The Council of Nice had in a very folemn manr Condemn'd Arius his Heretical Doctrine; to hich Condemnation, the forme of the Bishops the ere infected by him had craftily subscrib'd, yet d they privately favour his Opinions during Conantine's Reign, and more openly maintain and proes 'em under his Son Confrancius; who being him-If tainted with that abominable Pestilence, suffer'd to foreid through Confrantinople, the Metropolis f the East, from whence it issu'd forth and poi-on'd the greatest pare of the Western Empire, and rew up into a merciles Perfecution against all the und Believers; which was the more dangerous, for hat it was manag'd under the Pretence of Piety. ishops, thee had been Canonically chosen, and reularly effablish'd, were tumultuously pull'd out of heir Sees by the Authority of Contrivance of Comanting and others substituted in their Places, for o other Reason but because they violently adher'd o Arise his Tenets, denying the Divinity of the Eternal Son of God One Council was fummon'd o annul what another had done, and all things were nanagid with that Haction, Strife and Contention, s if they dabour'd to quench the Spirit of Meekels and Brotherly Love, fo often recommended in he Gospeh Some were banish'd, some imprison'd, nd against others they proceeded with more Seveity, even to the loss of their Lives; notwithstandng which the Church had then her Confessors, hat with a Divine Constancy preserved the Faith intire and uncorrupted. A confined and main and

As the beginning of the Spring, while leave

ted

oi Gr

ga ma

loc

wl the

acc

wl

tan

fol

bin

Fo

the

me

all

fuc

Ki

Spa

fur

fut

dit

de

to his op

to

un

Ma

TA

see he were fullered thore in thefe. Days

X. Julian was all this Winter confidering himself what Course he was to take, whether it most prudent to endeavour to bring Matters to amicable Composure with Constantius, and perso him by fair means to admit him for his Colle or wrest a Compliance from him by open Fe and by striking first add the greater Terror to Arms, He thought it dangerous to depend to his Friendship, under the Pretext of which might the more easily destroy him, as he had d his Brother Gallus before. On the other Han was no less dangerous to provoke him to be his nemy, he having always been too ftrong ford who fet themselves up in Opposition against him besides, it would be a piece of the highest In titude, to Rebel against his great Friend and B factor. However, after some Deliberation, hea cluded it more fafe and honourable to stand u his Guard, and therefore openly affum'd the perial Diadem and Purple, and made all manner Preparations to march against Constantiur, being cited to it by his Magicians, in whom he had entire Confidence, and the Encouragement he ceiv'd from fome Dreams, by which, he faid. knew Constantius was near his End. He was a de right Heathen in his Heart, but by an Hype unworthy an honest Man, much more va Pri he constantly frequented the Christian Assemble infomuch, that upon the Feast of the Epiphan which us'd to be observ'd with more than ord ry Solemnity in the Church, he publickly affit at Divine Service, hoping by this means to fecu the Christians to his Party, who were more in nu ber than the Heathens. state and appearance at etc.

At the beginning of the Spring, whilst he was busied in forming and perfecting his great Design

to

cho kin

di e di e di e di di di di

GA

ecu nu

he receiv'd Advice from the Borders, that the Go mans were again flown out into Rebellion, and had committed excessive Outrages in the Parts ada oining to Rhatia, now call'd the Country of the Grisons, which he imputed to Constanting his Infligation, who defigned in it to to embarafs the German Affairs, that Julian should have no time to look after him, who indeed had enough to do elfewhere, Tis certain he writ to Vademarius, one of their Kings, upon that Subject, and the Letters by accident were intercepted and brought to Tulian; who found what Pains the Emperor took to enrangle him, and therefore was fo much the more provok'd to break out into open Rebellion; but refolv'd first to punish these Barbarians, and sent Libino, one of his Commanders, with a sufficient Force against 'em; but he falling unadvisedly upon them, was kill'd in the beginning of the Engagement, and his Men routed. Julian advanc'd with all his Army to repair this Lofs, and was herein fo successful, that he defeated the Enemy, took their King Prisoner, whom he fent under a Guard into Spain, constrain'd 'em to ask Pardon, restore the Booty they had lately taken, and give him all Affurances of a quiet and dutiful Behaviour for the future; which being done, he refolved to march directly against Constantins and antack him that as foon as he had facrific'd to Bellena, the God des of War, and had by that means feeur'd her to his Party, the affembled the Army, and from his Tribunal address'd himself to 'em with more open Authority than formerly. He represented to em what great things they had already done under his Conduct, how they had restrain'd the Germans; and made the Rinne passable to the Roman Armies. He bid'em remember in white a mifetable Condition be found Gaul, and in what a flouri [bing_

I

he

n

i

hc

i

hd

in ou f

th ir

itt

op

re

h

L

ga II

ul

he

COM Ch

he

hė flourishing State he should leave it; and exh them to assist him with Chearfulness and Resident tion to make himself own'd for Emperor they, his great Comerades, had thought him thy so glorious a Title. He told 'em there greater things behind, which, if he succeeded this Expedition, he would undertake for their H nour, and the Welfare of the Empire. That he had bitherto behav'd himself with all Care Diligence, so would be proceed, constantly end vouring to discharge a good Conscience, and at nothing but what regarded the Publick Go He desir'd 'em to confirm that Concord and I delity that they had express d towards him by a M litary Oath, as it was usual; concluding with the Advice, That they Should make haste to fin upon the Limits of Dacia, before the Provi of Illyricum were secur'd by Garrisons, before ing 'em not to fully the Fame they had alread acquir'd by their Moderation, nor offer an Inju to any private Man what foever. When he done, the whole Army with all possible Demo strations of Joy took the accustom'd Oath, or mifing to follow him where-ever he thought to lead 'em, and to endure all Extremities for fake. Nebridius was the only Man throughou the Army who refus'd the Oath; he allede the great Obligations he had to Constanting and his former Oath to him would not permit to bind himself by a second to any other a no withstanding which, Julian dismiss'd him in Sale ty, and having preferr'd Commanianus Atoni Place, he fent away Saluft to be his Lieutenant Gaul. bis Con le from they had ne frain a Tulian openly profelles himthen.

Julian, thinking his Army well fecur'd to his by this Oath, began to throw off the Masks felf a Hea. publickly to declare himfelf a Heathen; he took w him the Title of Pontifex Maximus, as was tuomary with his Predeceffors that were Heathens, d firictly observ'd all their Idolatrous Ceremonies. fter this he order'd his Army to much, diftribu- And fees ng it into several Parties, sending Jouinus and Jos out against is with some by the common Roads of Italy, and the Empethers under the Conduct of Nevita through Rhea, and fo into Pannonia, that marching in fuch a ompass they might feem more numerous, and strike greater Terror into their Enemies. They met with bthing to oppose their March, but enter'd without he least Resistance into Illyricum; for the Inhabints were perfuaded that he came affifted by all the lings of Gaul, in which Provinces he had perform'd ich brave Exploits. At Sirmium he was receiv'd and is joyith the general Joy and Applause of the Inhabitants fully rend Soldiers, who with frequent Acclamations brought cerv'd at Sirmium. im to the Palace, where they proclaim thim Auguus. This prosperous Beginning was a great Enouragement to him, for he hop d that the Example f fo great and populous a City, would influence thers to do the like. The third Day after he left irmium, and took in Succi, a Place famous for its tuation between the Mountains Hamus and Bloope, of which he made Nevita Governor; and then rent forward to Nellus, a Town of Confequence. there he resided for some time, writing from thence Letter to the Senate of Rome, in which he exclaim'd gainst Constantius his Government, loading it with Il imaginable Reproaches. This Letter was read ublickly in an Affembly of the People, by whom he Substance of it was in general approv'd: For constanting was not much belov'd by the Orthodox thriftians, who had been perfecuted by him upon he account of Arianism, nor acceptable to the Heanens, who were all for Julian.

Progress; but whilst he lay at Nessus, without least Apprehension of an Enemy at his Back, was inform'd that Nigrinus, a Tribune of Horse, he seems to a Aquileia in Constantius his Name, to who he knew the Inhabitants were well affected, and printo it two Legions, and a Cohort of Archers, lian, who knew of what Consequence this would to his Proceedings, order'd some Troops to besie it, who press'd it very hard, and attempted all with imaginable to reduce it; but the Besieg'd behave themselves so well, and defended it with so must resolve that they held out 'till they heard of stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead, and then they surrender'd to the stantius was dead.

XI. The Emperor was about this time at Edit in Mesopotamia, whither he had remov'd from A tioch at the beginning of the Campaign. He w continually alarm'd with the Account of Fulia Behaviour in the West, and at a loss to find wh Course the Persians intended to take in the East. H Indignation prompted him to go and chaftife h Kinfman, but then it troubled him to think should leave Mesopotamia expos'd to the Violences the Enemy. He was willing to preferve his Am as entire as he could, in case of a Civil War, which he look'd on as unavoidable; and therefore dec ning any farther Designs upon the Persian Garrison which he found by Experience to be strongly for tify'd, he fent part of his Army under Arbette fecure the Banks of the Tigris, and do the be they could to prevent the Persians, should they tempt to pass it. These Orders were so well per form'd, that the King of Persia was forc'd tout turn home without attempting any thing; which when the Emperor was inform'd of, he drew Army together, and departed to Hierapolis, lear

d

ai

ge.

ose

sle

he

ccl

Vi

ve

ble

er

ner me

de

T

dir

The Emperor prepares to meet him, phon hav

muc d Co

V त्रोति

i do

Edel n A

ew

ulia

wh

·H

fe h

n ke

need

Am

w hid

ded rifon

y for eria t

e be

icy W

ll per toin

whid

wih

leav

only fuch behind as were necessary for the Deace of Mesopotamia. At Hierapolis he caus'd his my to be drawn up in the Camp, and from a ty Tribunal he sold em, with a ferene and pleaat Countenance, That having, through the whole urse of his Reign, endeavour'd so to comport himf as to be free from Reproach, he was now comain'd to accuse himself before them of too much. umanity, which be always thought conduc'd to the blick Good. That during the Necessity of his Afirs he had created Gallus Cælar, who ingratefully us'd the Honour he had given him, and, after the mmission of infinite Enormities, had receive the mishment he deserved. That persisting still in Friendship and Affection to the Family, he adne'd Julian to the same Honour; who, intoxicawith a few Advantages obtain'd over a weak skilful Enemy, presum'd to rebel against the mmon-wealth, which it was their Part to ded and preserve from Juob monstrous Attempts. at he made no doubt but when they came to enge, God would fight on their Side, and turn the vords of their Enemies against them, in behalf of ofe who drew not their Swords but to revenge the sleft Treason, and most barbarous Ingratitude. he Army answer'd his Speech with an universal cclamation, defiring him to lead em where his rvice requir'd, and promising to facrifice their ves and all in the Defence of fo just and honouble a Caufe. By this chearful Answer exceedingencourag'd, he dispatch'd Arbetio with a good rt of the Army towards the Streights of Succi, here Julian then was waiting for the Accession of ne more Forces, with which he intended to inde Thrace. grantel of both live on a deed ymage

The Emperor after this return'd to Antioch, where ror indiffoding himself a little indispos'd, he received Bap- tijed at

The Empetilm Antioch.

r

n

0

01 ra

ıla

as

ad on dy

m

ucl

in

as lle

e i

eig

ho

rtl

any

ne:

hd i

is S

n p tifm at the Hands of Enzoins the Arian. From tiech he came to Tarfus, where he was feird a feaverish Fit; but believing that Motion and ercise might do him good, he proceeded in his h pedition, and through many difficult Ways at len reach'd Mopfueftia or Mopfuerene, a small To in Cilicia, fituate at the Foot of the Mountain T rus. Hence he intended to proceed the next but was detain'd by the Violence of his Dife which increas'd more and more upon him; foth all Means us'd for his Recovery proving ineffect al, he dy'd on the fifth of Ottober, after he h us's Death. reign'd near 38 Years, and liv'd 44, An. Dom. 36

Constanti-A.D.

361. Successo-

Taurus and Florentins being Confuls. Some fayth at his Death he nam'd Julian for his Successor, h rem statu- which they plead Ammianus his Authority; iffe dicitur however is not positive in the Matter, but delive Julianum. it in very uncertain Terms, and for fear to will Will should be call'd in question by Posterity takes care to tell the World, the Emperor was in right Senses when he made it. Gregory Nazian and feveral others, are of a contrary Opinion; the fay, that Constantins, foreseeing what Calami were like to befal the Church under Julians A ministration, was very forry he had made him after which it's very improbable he should det him his Successor. Gregory faith, he was like truly penitent for the many Murders he had can to be committed upon his nearest Relations, and Cruelties the Arian Hereticks had made him exert upon the Faithful.

His Character.

It is not easie to determine whether his Vert or Vices were more abundant in him, the in C rity we ought to give it for the former. He a Capacity both in Civil and Military Affairs, of was fit for an Emperor; and a Greatness of M which made him neglect and despise all manner iis E n Ta

Tor

) ife

foth

ffed

ae h

2. 36 2 y th

or, f

W

eliv

wild

ty

48

mi

is A deck

kewi

call

xeru

285 ertu

n Cl

ie b

s, d riset.

Pop

pularity, and taught him how to maintain the randure of Majesty and Authority. He always obrv'd that useful Maxim among Princes, of conferng Honours upon his Subjects with a sparing Hand, which he upheld the Reputation of the Nobility. he same Care did he use in preferring his Servants, vancing none to any Employment of Honour, or ofit, but those who for their Diligence and Inteity had been before eminent in some inferior Of. te. He was chafte and temperate, and an utter ranger to those Vices with which Courts too ofn abound, and are usually laid to the Charge of ofe in greatest Authority. He was a zealous Prooter of the Christian Religion, and establish deral wholfome Laws for the Suppression of Idolay, Magick, and ill Manners. On the other hand, was so jealous of his Authority, that upon the aft Appearance of a design'd Usurpation there was end of his Inquisitions. In his Foreign Wars he as generally unfortunate, and the least ill Success ade him discompos'd and dejected; in his-Civil ontests he was always prosperous, and upon every dvantage he grew proud and infolent. He suffered inself to be govern'd too much by his Wives, Euuchs and defigning Courtiers, who by their aboinable Flatteries miss-led and infatuated him. He as not always constant in his Favours, but often reill'd what he had before bestow'd. Add to all this, e innocent Blood he caus'd to be spilt during his leign, and the Protection he gave the Arians, in hose behalf he discountenanc'd and persecuted the Prthodox Christians, thrusts him out of the Comany of good Princes, and feems to have drawn down he Vengeance of Heavin upon himself, his Family, d the Empire: Tho he was out-done in this by is Successor, whom God thought fit to raise up h purpose to chastise and purge his Church. For he being a fworn Enemy to Christianity, wh carefully oppress'd, and preferring none but fi declar'd against it, he quickly distinguish'd who were Christians indeed, from such as for worldly End had formerly made an outward felhon of it.

Constantius his Complexion was brown, his L lofty, and his Sight quick and piercing; the H of his Head was foft; his Face, which he le constantly shav'd, smooth and comely; from Neck to his Groin he was very tall, but his Le were short and bending, which made him excelle at Leaping and Running, Exercises in which took much Delight.

JULIAN. XII. Constantius being dead, the Corps were a mitted to the Care of Jovian, to be convey'd him in Royal Pomp to Constantinople, there to interr'd near his Progenitors: Whilft the chief C ficers, both Civil and Military, after they had their Tears and Lamentations teftify'd the great spect they had for the deceas'd Emperor, confu together what Methods were to be taken in refer to a Successor, and after some time agreed to diffe away Theolaiphus and Aliguldus to Julian, to de his Presence in the East, where they were all re to receive his Commands.

Tulian was all this while employing himself Illyricum, chiefly in a superstitious Enquiry into Entrails of Beafts, sometimes promising himself best, at others apprehending the worst Events; the most part doubtful and uneasie, not daring tol ly upon Conjectures, which too often fall out of trary to what they suggested. Whilst he was bouring under this Anxiety of Thought, The phus and Aliguidus arriv'd with the News of @ stantius his Death, and that he had declard him

Ch

Succ

Dou

Way

rect

with ants

dow

-yo

ow

Marc

rour

by I

effic

of B B

was

een

abm

Amo

nile

ore,

earc

ende

bsti

ant I live,

tordi

he I

ary,

live

er E

Punil

vere

arth

of en

ratit heir Successor: Upon which, deliver'd now from all his Doubts and Apprehensions, he gave Orders to march way into Thrace with all Expedition, moving directly towards Constantinople; where he was receiv'd Julian armittens, who beheld him with Wonder, as one dropt nople. down from Heav'n; scarce believing it possible that young Man as he was, little in Stature, but remown'd for his great Exploits, after an impetuous March from City to City, like a rising Flame devouring all that oppos'd him, should at length, as by Divine Appointment, obtain the peaceable Possision of the Imperial Seat, without any Expence of Blood or Treasure to the Common-wealth.

Being thus fettled in the Empire, his first Care was to punish such as had the Misfortune to have een his Enemies formerly, tho now some of em abmitted readily, and clos'd in with his Interest. Among these was Nigrinus, who had seiz'd on Amileia in Constantius his Name, as we observ'd beore, which he defended resolutely 'till the Besieg'd heard of the Emperor's Death, and then they furender'd at Difcretion, laying the Blame of their bstinate Resistance upon Nigrinus, who for his galant Fidelity to his Prince was condemn'd to be burnt live, which Sentence was executed upon him acordingly. Apodemins, who had so great a share in he Death of Gallus and Sylvanus, and Paul the Noary, that violent Profecutor, were likewife burnt live: Nor would the watchful Eye of Justice sufer Eusebins, that execrable Eunuch, to escape the Punishment he so well deserv'd. These Proceedings were just and equitable, and had Julian gone no arther he had not put his Friends to the Trouble of endeavouring to clear him from the Sin of Ingratitude; but the Death of Vefalus is a Stain all heir Arts can't wash out. This Person was Comes F 2

al

crit Co

m

Pla

ous fick

der

but

2 0

that

hav

take

Tev

y

rup

refo

Re

ceff

Gro

that

tion

I Ch

he i of .

fou

whi

ope

ady

lege fer'

Dei

call or l

tius em

Lib

Dargleionum, or Treasurer, and when Julian created Cafar, and fent into the West, he percei they had a Defign to straighten him in Mony, he might have nothing to bestow upon the Solo who would thereupon grow bold and ungovern fefit Orders to the Treasurer of Gaul to Supply far with whatever his Occasions should requ When Julian perceiv'd his Death appear'd foil nous to the People, he endeavour'd to excuse a Cr he could not expiate, pretending he fell against Will, and without his Knowledge, by the Fury the Soldiers, whom a fevere Reflection of his acmida had incens'd against him. But this his h Friends and Followers allow to be a lame Excuse; an that herein he came short of that regard to Justice which at other times they fay he usually observ'd. Instance of which they give us in his Answer to D phidius, who having accus'd Numerius, some ti before Governor of Gallia Narbonensis, of robbin the Publick Treasury; this bitter Orator finding Numerius give fo good an Answer to all his Alle gations, that there were no Proofs sufficient to a vict him, turning to Julian ask'd him in fome ! fion, If to deny be sufficient to be clear'd, what fender will ever be found guilty? To whom Full reply'd, And if to accuse be enough to conden what innocent Man will ever be safe?

Julian reforms the

From his Inquisitions upon these Persons This apply'd himself to a Reformation in the Court, t the Camp. great Officers of which had from an Indigence Fortune rais'd themselves up to vast Estates; burthen'd the Common-wealth by their intolen Exactions, and debauch'd it by their vicious Ex ples. They were in their Demands exorbitant, their Gifts profuse, in their Expences luxurious being grown fo habituated to invade the Rights others, that they stuck neither at Perjury nor S crilege

crilege. Nor was the Camp lefs corrupt than the Court, where the Soldier exercis'd himself daily in morous Airs, flept on his Field Bed, was fed in Plate, and having enrich'd himfelf by his ambitious Courses, grew vainly fond of Jewels, the intrinfick Value of which he pretended perfectly to understand, unlike the Ignorance of those who liv'd but in the Age before him; for it was reported of common Soldier in the Reign of Maninist, that at the Plunder of the King of Persia's Camp having found a Purse of Precious Stones, and being taken with the Finencis of it, he threw away the Jewels as things of no value, and went away highly fatisfy'd with his good Fortune and Thele Corruptions and Diforders Julian took great Care to reform, either because they call'd aloud for suchia Reformation, or to cast an Odinin upon his Predeceffor, under whose Reign they had gain'd so much Ground. He throughly purg'd the Court of all that were obnoxious in it, and made fuch Regulations in his Camp as he judg'd convenient.

He had in his Infancy been instructed in the Christian Religion, of which, for the most part, he made an outward Profession, will by the Death of Constantius his Fears were remov'd, and he found himself at Liberty to act as he pleas'd; at which time he commanded all the Temples to be opens the open'd, such as had been demolish'd to be re-built, Heathen advanc'd the Heathen Priests to their ancient Privi- Temples, leges and Immunities, order'd Sacrifices to be offer'd as formerly, and the Worship of the Pagan Deities to be reftor'd. At the same time he recall'd all the Christian Bishops, whether Orthodox or Hereticks, that had been banish'd by Constantius; and having fent for 'em to Court, he advis'd and deals em to lay all Diffentions afide, and gave 'em free craftily Liberty to live and believe every one as he thought Christians.

F 3

fit,

he

But

vok'

Mea who

Hono

Erro

hey

lie I err'd

had

were or,

pent had

o fu

dore

rous

be c to th

defir

who

Con

the '

relap

of C

tal S

ltop

the :

coui

who

y,

Wit

elev

that

The

V

fit, intending by that Liberty to fow greater fentions among them, and fo prevent the D he apprehended if once they came to be united he knew by Experience, faith Ammianus, the Beafts are not fo enrag'd against Men, as Chri diffenting upon Points of Faith are enraged ag each other. Being himfelf bred a Scholar, he had a great Efteem for Learned Men, with he familiarly convers'd, particularly Oribafius I mistius, and Libanius the Sophist, who had bee Tutor, and instill'd into him an Abhorrence to Christian Religion, which after he came to Emperor he had a great Defire to extirminate. observing that Persecution was so far from a nishing, that it rather increas'd the number Professors, who glory'd in that they were thou worthy to fuffer for the Name of Christ. therefore fought another way to ruin them." try'd by gentle Persuasions and glorious Prom to induce em to an Abjuration. He deprive fuch as stood firm to the Faith of all their Of and Employments, whether Civil or Military. prohibited Christians from keeping any Pub Schools, or teaching the Sciences, unless they we first turn Heathens. And whereas twas Cufto ry for the Emperors to present the Soldiers with Donative upon the first Day of the Year, up their Birth-days, or the like; Julian ordered, whoever came into his Presence for that purp should first, according to an ancient Roman itom, offer Incense upon an Altar adorn'd with Images of the Gods intermix'd with feveral of Several Christian Soldiers being better structed; and more zealous than the reft, chose ther to lose the Present than pollute themselves with Idolatry: Some ignorant of what they were do and others either through Avarice or Fear, die

Chap. I. XLIII. Julian.

he rest of their Comerades that were Heathen. But some time after, when divers of em, who inok'd the Name of Jefus before they fate down to Meat, were ask'd how they came to call upon him, whom they had deny'd, having offer'd Incense in Honour to his fworn Enemy; they, fenfible of their Error, publickly protested to the whole World that hey were Christians, and were resolv'd to live and lie in the Faith of Jesus Christ; that they had rr'd through Ignorance, and that their Consciences had no share in the Crime of which their Hands were guilty. After this they went to the Empeor, and return'd him his Donative, declaring they repented from their Souls the abominable Sin they had committed, to expiate which they were ready to fuffer Death for the Name of Jefus Christ. The doret adds, that Julian was so enrag'd at this geneous Action, that he commanded all their Heads to be chopp'd off; and that when they were brought to the Place of Execution, the elder among 'em defir'd the Executioner to begin with the youngest, who was call'd Romanus, left feeing formany of his Companions Executed before him, he should, thro' the Weakness of his Youth, lose his Courage, and relapse; and that whilft he was calling on the Name of God upon his Knees, in expectation of the faal Stroke, an Order came from the Emperor to ftop the Execution, and they were all banish'd to the remotest Parts of the Empire.

Whilst he continued at Constantinople he was courted by Ambassadors from all Nations, among whom he was renowned for his Fortitude, Sobriety, Military Skill, and other eminent Virtues. With these and his other Felicities he was much elevated, forming to himself Designs and Fancies that exceeded the Bounds of Human Nature. His Thoughts ran much upon the Persian War, which

F 4

Cl

the

Bu vol

M

Ho

Er

the

eri

W

ro

pe

to

od

ro

be

to

de

W

C

th

re

o

ta

ſŧ

tl

C

W

e

fit, intending by that Liberty to fow greater Dis. fentions among them, and fo prevent the Danges he apprehended if once they came to be united; he knew by Experience, faith Ammianus, that will Beafts are not to enrag'd against Men, as Christians diffenting upon Points of Faith are enrag'd against each other. Being himself bred a Scholar, he ever had a great Esteem for Learned Men, with whom he familiarly convers'd, particularly Oribafius The mistius, and Libanius the Sophist, who had been his Tutor, and instill'd into him an Abhorrence to the Christian Religion, which after he came to be Emperor he had a great Defire to extirminate; but observing that Persecution was so far from diminishing, that it rather increas'd the number of its Professors, who glory'd in that they were thought worthy to fuffer for the Name of Christ, he therefore fought another way to ruin them. He try'd by gentle Persuasions and glorious Promises to induce em to an Abjuration. He depriv'd all fuch as flood firm to the Faith of all their Offices and Employments, whether Civil or Military. He prohibited Christians from keeping any Publick Schools, or teaching the Sciences, unless they would first turn Heathens. And whereas 'twas Customry for the Emperors to prefent the Soldiers with Donative upon the first Day of the Year, upon their Birth-days, or the like; Julian order'd, that whoever came into his Presence for that purpose, should first, according to an ancient Roman Cuftom, offer Incense upon an Altar adorn'd with the Images of the Gods intermix'd with feveral of his Several Christian Soldiers being better instructed, and more zealous than the rest, chose rather to lose the Present than pollute themselves with Idolatry: Some ignorant of what they were doing, and others either through Avarice or Fear, did is the Hi

-

but

might

he

He

ices

He

fick

uld ma-

ha

boh

hat

ofe, Cu-

the

his

m.

řá-

ich

ng,

the

the rest of their Comerades that were Heathen. But some time after, when divers of em, who invok'd the Name of Jefus before they fare down to Meat, were ask'd how they came to call upon him, whom they had deny'd, having offer'd Incense in Honour to his fworn Enemy; they, fentible of their Error, publickly protested to the whole World that they were Christians, and were resolv'd to live and die in the Faith of Jesus Christ; that they had err'd through Ignorance, and that their Consciences had no share in the Crime of which their Hands were guilty. After this they went to the Emperor, and return'd him his Donative, declaring they repented from their Souls the abominable Sin they had committed, to expiate which they were ready to fuffer Death for the Name of Jefus Christ. Theodoret adds, that Julian was so enrag'd at this generous Action, that he commanded all their Heads to be chopp'd off; and that when they were brought to the Place of Execution, the eldest among 'em defir'd the Executioner to begin with the youngest, who was call'd Romanus, left feeing to many of his Companions Executed before him, he should, thro' the Weakness of his Youth, lose his Courage, and relapse; and that whilst he was calling on the Name of God upon his Knees, in expectation of the fatal Stroke, an Order came from the Emperor to stop the Execution, and they were all banish'd to the remotest Parts of the Empire.

Whilst he continu'd at Constantinople he was courted by Ambassadors from all Nations, among whom he was renown'd for his Fortitude, Sobriety, Military Skill, and other eminent Virtues. With these and his other Felicities he was much elevated, forming to himself Designs and Fancies that exceeded the Bounds of Human Nature. His Thoughts ran much upon the Persian War, which

F 4

der

tro

the

ney

711

 \mathbf{H}^{ϵ}

De

anic

Pre

wh

COL

and

bee

wa:

Th

at]

acc

lass

hin

Ri

fig fon

hig

in

had a f

ma

Wa he

fho

ftia

mo

anc

ons

wh

in

he was resolved to carry on with the greatest Vi gour. Before he enter'd upon it he consulted the Heathen Oracles, who all promis'd him glorione Success; but none encouraged him to this Expedi tion fo much as Maximus the Philosopher and Ma gician, who promis'd him no less a Victory than the which Alexander obtain'd over the Persians, perfus ding him, according to the Doctrine of Pythagorate that the Soul of that renown'd Conqueror was trans migrated into him. The gross Affurances and Flatteries of his Priefts and Magicians had made him fo fecure and prefumptuous, that he rejected the Af fistance his Allies offer'd him by their Ambasta dors at Antioch, telling 'em it became the Great ness of the Roman Empire to succour and support her Friends, and not truft to the Affistance of Strangers, Ja Lines

A. D. 362. Stantinople.

Before he left Constantinople he much improved and enlarg'd it, by the Addition of many beautiful He beau- Buildings; for being the Place of his Nativity, he tifies Con- always express'd a great Affection for that City He order'd a very convenient Harbour to be built in the Shape of a Greek Sigma, where those Ships that traded thither from the South might ride in great Safety; and in the Gallery of his own Palace he furnish'd a Library with the choicest and most valuable Books he could procure, after which he remov'd Eastward in his Progress to Antioch.

Begins his XIII. Having cross'd over into Afia, he pass'd Expedition. through Chakedon and Libyffa, (where Hannibal was bury'd) and thence came to Nicomedia, a City which the Care and Indulgence of former Prince had fo much enlarg'd and beautify'd, and which an Earthquake had now reduc'd to fo miferable a Condition, that Julian could not behold it without Tears, having himself resided here in his Youth under the constant of the constant o

of 10 vid

ful

he

ty.

ice

of

he

of

sh

s'd

WAS

ity

an

ob

ut

ın-

ler

der the Care of Enfebins the Bishop, the great Patron of Arianism. After he had given Orders for the Repair of the Place he proceeded in his Journey, and arriv'd at Antioch about the latter End of He arrives July. As he approach'd the City, that beautiful at Antioch. Head of the East, he was met and receiv'd like some Deity, the People following him with their Vows and Acclamations, and gazing on him as on fome Propitious Star newly rifen in their Hemisphere, which high Opinion of him he improv'd at his first coming by feveral Examples of his great Patience and Humility. There was one Thalassias, who had been a bitter Enemy to his Brother Gallus, and stance of was therefore in no degree of Favour with him. Justice. This fome Persons, with whom Thalassius was then at Law, having observ'd, came in a great Body and accus'd him to the Emperor, complaining that Thalass, who had the Infolence to be at Enmity with him, had by Violence depriv'd 'em of their just Rights. Julian, sensible that this was done defignedly to ruin the Man, answer'd, That the Perfon of whom they complain'd, had, he confess'd, highly offended him, and that therefore they ought in good Manners to suspend their Claim till he had given him, who was fo much their Superior, a fuitable Satisfaction; and at the same time commanded the Præfect, affifting him as the Custom was upon the Bench, not to hear their Cause 'till he was reconcil'd to Thalassius, which was done a short time after; for Thala lins renouncing the Chriftian Religion, and embracing that which was then most in Fashion, recover'd the Emperor's Favour, and was afterwards very intimate with him.

Julian winter'd, according to his first Intentions, at Antioch; where, averse to those Pleasures with which Syria too much abounded, he spent his Time in hearing and determining Causes, with exquisite

Care

2

ce

he

he

D

m

be

C

#5

25

th

les

C

ra.

he

Co

H

Ge

W

Pic

fit

ft e

ft

W

th

of

lef

hi

W

laf

ce

Care and Dexterity adjudging to every one his Due. And the fometimes, as our Historian confesses, he would ask improper and unseasonable Questions in a Debate, as what Religion this or the Party then at Law profess'd; yet no Respect to Religion, or any thing else, made him deviate from Justice, or inclin'd him to a partial Determination; for being sensible of the Levity and Heat of his Temper, he permitted the Præsects and those about him by seasonable Hints to restrain his Impetuality, being pleas'd to be corrected by 'em, and a sham'd of his Faults when they had made him seasons the professes and those about the present the present of the pr Quarrels with the Inhabitants at Antioch.

These things highly ingratiated him with the Inhabitants, but the good Understanding between em was of no long continuance; for whilft he lay it Antioch, and observ'd the Multitudes of People that flock'd thither upon his own Account, and that of his Attendants, he concluded fo great a Concourse must in a short time create a Dearness of Provisions, which out of a Humour of Affectation and Popularity he had a great Ambition to prevent, by endeavouring to make things cheaper than they could well bear to be, which being forc'd in an inconvenient way ferves rather to create a Scarcity than prevent it; this the Corporation of Antioch reprefented to him, yet was he obstinate to see it accomplish'd; for the Merchants, who found themselves oblig'd to Trade to their own Loss, chose rather to thut up their Ware-houses than expose their Goods; from whence enfu'd a great want of Necessaries throughout the City, which highly provok'd the Inhabitants against him, and expos'd him to their severest Reflections. They call'd him Victimarin, by reason of his multitude of Sacrifices, to which he was so extravagantly addicted; Cercops or Dwarf, and Goats-Beard, because he took great Delight in 100;

his

bout uofi-

die-

fer

230

e In-

em

y at

that

t of

urfe

vifi-

and by ould

nvethan

pre-

om-

lyes

erto ods;

ries

the heir iss,

nich

ranf,

t in

a long picked Beard; at which he was so highly incens'd that he writ an Invective against 'em, which he call'd the Antiochian or Beard-Hater, in which he expos'd, with a deal of Virulence, the Vices and Defects of the Citizens, mixing with the Truth many things that were Foreign to it.

During his Stay at Antioch, Gandentins, who had been sent by Constantins into Africk to secure that Country to him, and Julian, another of Constantimi's Favourites, were apprehended and put to Death; as was likewise Artemius Governor of Egypt, upon the importunate Application of the Citizens of Alexandria, who accus'd him of many enormous Crimes, if Ammianus may be credited; for feveral Christian Writers affirm he dy'd a Martyr, that he lost his Head by Julian's Order, because during Constantius his Reign he had destroy'd many of the Heathen Idols in Egypt. About the same time George, who had thrust himself into the Bishoprick George, the of Alexandria when St. Athanasius was expell'd, Arian Biwas kill'd by the Multitude. He was a great Cham. Joop. pion for the Arians, who charg'd Athanasius his Followers with his Death, and plac'd him in their Calender as a Martyr, from whence he crept infenfibly into the Latin Church, by whom he is efleem'd as a Saint and Martyr, challenging the twenty third of April for his Festival. His Legend is stuff'd with many ridiculous Absurdities, among which his fighting the Dragon on Horfeback is not the least remarkable. If the Account the Authors of those Times, both Christian and Heathen, have left us of him be true, we have little reason to take him either for a Saint or Martyr. All this while Julian was very intent upon the War; he confider'd how the Persians had for the laft fixty Years miferably harrafs'd the Eaftern Provinces, and overthrown feveral Armies that were fent to restrain

Cł

M

ha

to

fec of

th

20

W

ho

m ha fai

fo

of

ag

hi ly

V B

tl

m

11

b

Church

restrain 'em; this kindled in him a Desire of Re. venge, which together with an Ambition of gracing his former Exploits with the glorious Sirname of Parthicus, made him very zealous in his Prepare tions, but he was in nothing to affiduous as his Si crifices, compassing Sea and Land for Victims which bled upon the Altars. Sometimes he would offer an hundred Bulls at a time, innumerable Droves of other Beafts, and white Birds procur'd at a val Expence; fo that almost every Soldier, and that most every Day, was led or born home to his Quarters drunk and furfeited from the Temple wherein they feasted, and that contrary to the Discipline he is faid to have establish'd so carefully in the Army. And as his Superstition encreas d, so was there no end of Rices and Ceremonies in his Religion, which introduced an Expence that swell's up to Sums vast and unusual. Whospever pretended to the Art of Divination, which in his Prodecessor's Days was esteem'd a Capital Crime, was receiv'd with all imaginable Encouragement; and fo far was he addicted to Practices of this Nature, that he resolv'd to open the Castilian Fountain, confecrated heretofore to Apollo, in whose Name the Devil issu'd out his Famous Oracles. This Fourtain had been long fince choak'd up by Adrian who being here foretold that he should one Day be Emperor, was unwilling any hereafter should meet with the same Encouragement. But whilit the Emperor was amusing himself with these Superstitious Vanities an Accident happen'd, from The Tem- which he received no small Disturbance. On the ple of Apol- twenty fecond of October the spacious Temple of Apollo at Daphne, the Suburb of Antioch, built by Antiochus Epiphanes, took Fire, and was suddenly burnt to the Ground; this the Emperor charge upon the Christians, and commanded the great lo burnt.

Chaple V XLIII Julian.

Re

e of

am

Sa

nich

ffer

s of

vaft

t d

his

nple

DL

r u

fo

bis

114

DIG. Pro-

Was

and

ire,

110

the

un-

an,

Day uld

ill

Su-

am thé

of

by

oly

ch

Church at Amisch to be thut up ; tho' Ammianus Marcellinus gives another Account of it along

However this aggravated the great Aversion he had to the Christians, and made him more defirous to suppress em. He knew Christianity was suppofed to fucceed, and to be founded upon the Ruins of Judalimo and he thought if he could once reftore the old Geremonies and Sperifices of that Religions he should raise a great Argument against the Truth and Progress of the former; the readiest way to which was to re-build the Temple of Ferusalem, Julian enwhich had been long fince destroy'd by Titus Ver deavours Spassan: And therefore he was resolved to effect it, to re-build how great foever the Expence should be, and com- at Jerusamitted the Care of it to Alypins an Antiochian, who lem, had formerly commanded here in Britain; at the fame time he encourag'd the Jews to be affilling to fo good a Work, defiring 'em to pray the Soveraign of the Universe to prosper him in his Expedition against the Perfians, releas d'em from several Impofitions with which they had been charg'd, and promis'd 'em all the Happinels they could expect under his Administration. Alypius apply'd himself diligent from which ly to the Work, and was affifted in it by the Go. he is diververnor of the Province; but on a fudden dreadful and by a Balls of Fire broke out from the Ground, where Prodigy. the Foundations were laid, and confuming the Works Ammian. Marcel. made the Place inaccefible.

The same Year there happen'd an Earthquake at Jerusalem, which ras'd the Foundations of the former Temple, and over-turn'd feveral publick Buildings, under which a great multitude of Jews lay bury'd; and another at Conframinople, which tho not fo violent, endanger'd a great Part of the City. These Accidents, with several other unlucky Omens, as he term'd 'em, strangely terrify'd the superstitious Emperor. Felix and Julian, two Officers of great Autho-

A. D.

lat W

of E

W

at

on Pr

in. Ti

an

to tha fib

arr

bra

Da

Sic

Co

fill

Pro

W

Bri

to

of.

for

ftra

into

wh

the

cle

cei

ly 1

tene

evit

full

fom

latinus

Authority, dy'd much about the same time, the People, who usually saluted him with the Title of Julianus Felix Augustus, look'd on it as ominous that he who was Augustus should be nam'd in con pany with Felix and Julian, who were both dead. When he departed from Antioch a confus'd multitude of the Citizens attended him out of the City wishing him a successful Journey, and a triumphant Return, and pray'd him for the future to be more mild and gracious to them: But he, still nettled their bitter and undutiful Reflections, told 'em in great Anger, he would never visit them again, but winter at Tarfus in Cilicia; which he accordingly did, for he was privately bury'd in the Suburbs of that His Pro- City. As he enter'd into Hierapolis on the fifth of March, fifty Soldiers were kill'd by a Fall of some Buildings, and a great many more hurt. Having pass'd the Euphrates by a Bridge of Boats he came to Bama a Town of Osdruena, where fifty Soldiers more were overwhelm'd with a Stack of Straw. From Batna he proceeded to Carha, an ancient Town and a Frontier toward Assria, famous for the Death of Crassus, and the Overthrow of the Roman Army. Here he rested a while to furnish his Army with Provisions, and Sacrific'd to the Moon, the great Goddels of the Country; at whose Altar he is faid fecretly to have deliver'd his Purple Military Coat to his Kiniman Procopius, bidding him resolutely to feize on the Empire upon the first Intelligence of his Miscarriage in Parthia, The late unlucky Omens had made him irrefolute and uneafie, so that being troubled with ill Dreams he foreboded fome Mischief at hand, and both he and his Wizards declar'd that they mult expect some signal Disaster the Day following, being the 19th of March, which brought nothing extraordinary with it, notwithstanding their Predictions; tho it appear'd afterwards that the Temple of Apollo Pa gress.

13, m d. 11.

ty,

a.

10

tge

lid,

hat

of me ing

me

iers

om

and

ath

ny.

ith

reat

aid

oat

7 to

his

had led

nd.

uft

ing

rdi-

ho

PA

INNS

latinus was burnt the very fame Night at Rome. Whilft he was here employ'd in disposing the March of his Army, he was inform'd that a Party of the Enemies Horse had broken into the Empire, and were return'd with a confiderable Booty. Provok'd at this, he put a Defign he had before laid in execution, and committed a Party of thirty thousand Men to Procepius and Sebastian, who had been Commander in Egypt, ordering em to keep a strict Watch within Tigris, the better to prevent any fudden Accident, and when they had join'd Arfaces, which they were to attempt, he commanded em to waste Chiliocomus, that fruitful Tract of Media, and meet him if polfible in Affria. After this he began his March, and arriv'd the fecond Day at Callinifus, where he celebrated the Feast of the Mother of the Gods. The Day following he directed his March by the River Side, where he was met by his Fleet, under the Conduct of Constantianus and Lucillianus. It confifted of a thouland Vessels of Burden, laden with Provisions, Arms and Engines, besides fifty Men of War, and as many defign'd upon occasion to make Bridges for the Army. From hence he proceeded to Circufium, which he enter'd about the Beginning of April. It was then a very strong and neat Town. fortify'd heretofore by Dioclesian, the better to restrain the Persians, who by their frequent Incursions into Syria did great Mischief to the Provinces. Here whilst Julian was busied in passing his Army over the River Avora, which with the Emphrates incircled the Town in the manner of an Illand, he receiv'd Letters from Sallust, Præfect of Gaul, earnestly pressing him to desist for the present from his intended Expedition, and not thrust himself upon inevitable Destruction before the Divine Powers were fully pacify'd. But he, in contempt of this wholetome Admonition, press'd on with greater Confidence;

hi

OI

ta

W

A

in

Co

hi

m

210

dir

ter

or lar

mo

his

As

as 1

mig

nat

and

fou

Irru

ry

Flo

acco

DOM

mer

the!

and till

bur

was

Aco

fer'd

as lil

dence; and having pass'd his Army over, caus'd he Bridge to be broken down, to cut off from his Me all Hopes of a Retreat. At Dura a Lion of val Bigness presented it felf to the Army, who with shower of Darts dispatch'd it in a moment. This Spectacle rais'd his Hopes and redoubled his Courage but upon what infufficient Ground the Event wil demonstrate. His Philosophers persuaded him 'two a lucky Omen, but the Hetruscan Aruspices, who were the better Artists, prov'd from their Books the contrary. The Day following a Soldier nam'd % vian was struck dead by a Flash of Lightning, which confirm'd the Herruscans in their former Opinion, and made 'em advise him to quit the Country a dangerous and fatal, which the Philosophers opposid with Arguments more agreeable to Julian's Temper; who in a chearful Speech address'd himself to the Army, telling 'em what mighty Actions had been perform'd by former Commanders as well against the Persians as others, animated to it by their Affection to their Country, and affifted by the Love and Resolution of their Soldiers; that he was resolv'd to imtate such generous Examples, if they were willing to join with him in so glorious an Undertaking, where in he had the Advantage of Justice on his Side, in revenge of those many Injuries the Roman Provinces had of late Years receiv'd from 'em. The Soldiers animated with this Discourse resolv'd to obey him chearfully, and appear worthy to Noble a Commander; who thereupon immediately enters the Affirean Borders, where fearing an Ambuscade he pro-His Order dently divided his Army into four Bodies, appointof March- ing fifteen hundred as a Forlorn, who marching fometimes before, fomerimes on each fide, were to provent any fudden Irruption from the Enemy, and give warning upon all Occasions. In the middle he plac'd the Foot, confisting of the main Strength of

ing.

the %

ion,

y as osid

per; the

ibe

tion

efo-

1781-ling

ere

in nos

iers

him

pan-

yni-

int-

me

pro

200 lie

2.0

his

his Army, which he led himself; on the Right he order'd feveral Legions, under the Conduct of Nevita, to coast along the River Euphrates, and the Left Wing with some Troops of Horse he committed to Arintheus, and Horsmisda a Persian, who having been injur'd by the King his Brother, fled for Refuge to Constantine the Great, and after several Proofs of his great Fidelity was preferr'd to confiderable Commands. They were to march through the Plains and Marshes, whilst Dagalaiphus, Victor and Secundinus brought up the Rear. And to strike a greater Terror into the Enemy, if they dar'd affault him, or view him at a Distance upon his March, he enlarg'd his Ranks, by which means the Front was almost ten Miles distant from the Rear, which made his Army appear much more numerous than it was. As for the Fleet, he order'd it to attend the Army as near as possibly it could, that upon occasion they might afford each other a mutual Affistance.

In this manner they march'd to a Fort call'd Anathan, which furrender'd upon the first Summons, and was burnt by the Emperor's Order. Here they found a Roman Soldier, who when Maximian made Irruptions into these Parts, had been left behind very fick: Upon his Recovery, being then in the Flower of his Age, he was marry'd to feveral Wives, according to the Custom of the Country, and was now grown extream old, and the Father of a numerous Issue. He with great Joy was brought to the Emperor, before whom he affirm'd that he knew and had formerly often foretold, that he should live 'till he was near an hundred Years of Age, and be bury'd at length in the Roman Territories; which was confirm'd by the Testimony of several of his Acquaintance. The Day following the Army fuffer'd much by the Violence of a tempestuous Wind, as likewise by the breaking out of the River, which whether

nati

dier

put nor

Cit

der

For

Was

He

ver

fage

Boo

the

ligh

Pro

the

of 1

who

Par

lian

as h thit

him

he

He

wha Sie

gre

Suc

not

for

at t

his

Ob

the

the

whether it proceeded from a natural Caufe, or the Effect of some Stratagem in the Enemy, is certain. From hence they marched without me ing any Opposition to a Town call'd Ozogarda which they took, the Inhabitants having abando it upon the Approach of the Army. From he Horsmisla was fent out to make Discoveries, had like to have fallen into the Enemies Hands, w lay ready to infnare him; but the River fwel higher than usual hinder'd their Passage, and bein discovered by a Party of Roman Soldiers they we forc'd to retire with fame Loss. The first Diff culty of any moment they met with was at Pirifa bera, a Town strongly fortify'd by Art and Natur and no less secur'd by the Resolution of the Isla bitants, who gave Ear to no Treaties will they ha try'd their utmost in a very vigorous Defence, and found it impossible to maintain the Place. The tal ing this City, being the greatest next to Cresiphon in all Affria, brought great Reputation to the Emperor's Arms, besides the great quantity of Provision and Ammunition that were found in it prov'd very feafonable to the Army, who began to stand in new of both.

After he had set Fire to the Town, and in a form'd Speech pacify'd the Army, that began to grow mutinous, he proceeded forward, and after a March of sourteen Miles came to a low Ground, which the Enemy, who had notice they would pass that way, laid under Water, and thereby expos'd 'em to many Difficulties. But at length they arriv'd at Manozamalcha, a large and well fortify'd Town, before which he encamp'd in order to besiege it. He drew a double Line round it, and with his battering Engines broke down a Tower, and part of the Wall: Notwithstanding which the Besieg'd defended them selves with great Gallantry, trusting much to the natural and and an extension

me

mu-

h of

the

ray,

fore

TOW

EF

all:

em

the

tura

natural Strength of the Phoe, 'nill at length the Soldiers by means of a Mine got into the City; and put all they found to the Sword, except the Governor and foune few of the principal Officers. The City was given up to the Soldiers, who first plunder'd and then burnt it.

After this they pas'd further, and arriv'd at two Forts, where Willow, who conducted the Forlers. was oppos'd by the King of Perfia's Son; who at the Head of a firong Detachment, and attended by feveral Noblemen of the Country, disputed his Pasfage over the River; but when they faw the whole Body of the Army advancing they retir'd, and left the Romans Mafters of a pleasant Country full of delightful Groves, and enrich'd with all forts of Fruits. Proceeding clittle farther, the Ramans loft Part of their Baggage and Carriages: For whilft the Front of the Army was diverted by a Party of Persians, who were fent on purpose to amuse them, another Party fell in upon the Rear, and surprized em. Julian enraged at this drew on towards Crefiphon, and as he was viewing a Fort which lay in his Passage thither, he rid too near the Walls, and they ply'd Julian in him fo warmly with their Darts from above, that great Danhe was carry'd off with great Hazard of his Life. ger. He was refolv'd to be reveng'd for this Infolence whatever it coff him, and for that Purpole laid close Siege to the Place, which they within defended with great Vigour, encouraged by Promifes of a speedy Succour from the King, who lay with his Army not far off from them. But he thrufting himfelf forward into all Difficuties, and fighting in Person at the Head of his Men, who were encouraged by his Example, and influenc'd by his Prefence and Observation, obtain'd his Defire, and having burnt the Fort, allowed his Army some time to refresh. themselves. After which, through a Cut cleans'd for

for that Purpose, he pass'd his Fleet out of Employ Hitherto Fortune for the most part seem'd to tes into Tigris.

He grows obstinate:

And burns

his Ficet.

court and encourage him, but his Success made him rash and inconsiderate, and rais'd him in Imagination on above all Difficulties, to which he frequently expos'd himfelf and his Army, contrary to the repeated Advice and Petitions of his most experienc'd Of ficers. He totally gave himself up to the Direction of his own Fancies and improbable Chimæra's, fuggested to him by his vast Ambition, which aim'd at nothing less than the entire Conquest of all Perfa. And tho' at a Council of War held near Ctefiphon he was advis'd to the contrary, he obstinately perfished in his Resolution of proceeding farther up into the Country, induc'd to it by the Encouragement of some Guides, who undertook to conduct him. And left the Enemy should become Masters of his Fleet, or else for that no less than twenty thousand Men were constantly employ'd to man and govern it, he order d all his Ships to be fet on Fire, except twelve imal Rates, which were to be taken in pieces, and convey'd over Land in Waggons, to build Bridges with if there should be occasion. This was put in execution accordingly, notwithstanding all the Arguments his Friends offer'd to oppose it, to which he was deaf 'till it was too late, and his Guides were forc'd by Torture to confess that they had offer'd him their Service with no other Delign but to run him.

This unlucky Proceeding reduc'd the Army to the last Extremity, for now they had lost all Means of a Retreat, and were cut off from all Opportunities of a Supply either of Men or Provisions: And the Persians, perceiving the Disadvantages under which they labour'd, laid all the Country waste before em, and insulted em sometimes in the Front, sometimes

in

in m

Re

th

w

Co

ter

ma

the

by

ry the

and nat

tim

Leg

der

Ma

a V

Plac

and

No

the

whi

refr

and labo

Perf

all n

to a

Dea

as hi

dead

whic

in the Flank, and at others in the Rear, and in a manner befieg'd'em. This extreamly dispirited the Roman Army, which was very much weaken'd thro' the Inconveniences of the Country, and the Hardships to which they were expos'd; nor knew they what Course they were best to take in a strange Country, deprived of all manner of Provisions. After many Confultations they relolv'd at length to march towards Corduena, and on the 16th of June they fet forward accordingly.

him

ati

excat-

OI.

tion fug-

m'd

rfea.

n he

fted

the

ome

left

10 vere

er'd

mall

On-

vith

exegu.

he

rere

erid

um

-316

to

ans

ını-

the

ich

em,

nes in

They had not march'd far before they were met He engages by a strong Body of Persians, well provided in eve- with the ry respect, and commanded by Merenes, General of whom he the Horse, accompany'd by two of the King's Sons, defeats. and a great number of the Nobility; here an obffinate Fight began, which lafted for a confiderable time, 'till the Persians, over-power'd by the Roman Legions, gave Ground, and retir'd in the most orderly manner they could. The Romans remain'd Malters of the Field, but found little Satisfaction in a Victory, which could not relieve their Wants in a Place where no Provisions were to be had, the Corn and Grass, and every thing else, proper for the Nourishment of Man or Horse, being burnt up by the Enemy.

Both Sides had agreed to a Truce for three Days which time was employ'd in burying the Dead, and refreshing their Bodies tir'd with excellive Heat and the Fatigues of the Battel. Julian all this while labour'd under great Perplexities, for he found the Persians resolv'd to oppose his March, and attempt all manner of ways to diffres him, without coming to a formal Engagement. The Night before his Death, after a short and troublesome Sleep, he rose, as his Custom was, to Read or Write, and in the dead of the Night he beheld the Publick Genius, which is faid to have appear'd to him once before upon his being declar'd Emperor in Gand, to

with a Countenance full of Sorrow forfake

This fudden unexpected Accident surprised his Fear, he refigned all, faith my Author, to the De termination of Providence; and rifing early to his

the Skies, which having travers'd a good part of the Devotions, he faw an Exhalation shooting through tho min Vi in he no had hap

Boo

AS.

lan a out

blo

AS TI

to De

ave hiz

lop

the

dr an hi

H

sp th

th

Air, vanish'd in a Moment. This he violently for spected to be the Star of Mars, who not long fine had rejected his many Sacrifices, and was now com in a menacing manner to tell him how little le was to expect from him. Hereupon he confulme his Herrurian Augurs, who told him he was by that Omen advis'd to abstain from aghting; and when they perceiv'd that in spight of this their Inter pretation he was refolv'd to proceed, they intrested him to defer his March but for a few Hours, to which he gave fo little heed, that as foon as it wis Light he order'd his Army to decamp. The Profians, who made the best of every Advantage, fometimes affaulted him upon the Flank, and fome times fell in upon the Rear, which occasion'd feveral Encounters between 'em, in all which the Emperor behav'd himself with an unexampl'd Brivery; but at length being too eager in Pursuit of the Persians, who now began to give Ground, Horse-man's Javelin pierc'd through his Arm into his Side, from whence, or by whom directed, no one knew, with the Pain of which he funk down upon the Neck of his Horse, and was with all speed convey'd into his Tent; where observing those about him to be dejected and forrowful, he told 'em, He was now sall'd upon to pay the Den of Nature, which he did with a willing and chearful Mind, being taught by Philosophy bow much bappier

He is wounded.

fince

come s by

200 nter

. 00 Vis

Par

gr.

R.

the

Bra-

t of 4

into

100

WD

all ing

he

chi

ier

happier the State of the Soul is than that of the Body, upon which Consideration be embras & Death as the greatest Blessing, which exempted here from those Dangers to which the Necessity of his Affairs must daily expose bim, to the great Hazard of his Virtue and Reputation. That having lived at first in a private, and afterwards in an exalted State, he had so behaved himself in both as to repent of no Action throughout his whole Life. had great Reason to thank Divine Providence, for that he fell not by the Hand of Conspirators, nor languistid under a Disease, or suffer'à Death as a Criminal, but that he made a glorious Passage out of the World with his Honours fresh and blooming about him. That he who is fond of Life when be ought to Die, is as great a Coward, as he who defires Death when he ought to Live. That he declin'd naming a Snecessor, lest through Ignorance be Should pass by a worthy Person, or in naming one fully qualify'd he should expose him to Danger upon the Preference of another after his Death, but, like a dutiful Son to the Commonwealth, he wish'd her a worthy Governor to succeed him:

After this, and a short Discourse with the Philosophers, Maximus and Priscus, concerning the Sublimity of the Soul, the Wound began to gape, and He dies of the Tumour of the Vessel intercepted his Breath; his Wound. then calling for a Glass of cold Water, which he drank up, he expir'd about Midnight. Theodores, and most Christian Writers who have written of him, say, when first he was wounded he fill'd his Hand with Blood issuing from the Wound, and threw it up into the Air with this dreadful Blasphemy, Thou hast Conquer'd, O' Galilean; tho' others maintain it was the Sun against which he thus threw up his Blood, because he was God of the

Ch

and

non

cou

an (

him

Go

tain

dul

gul

tho

pati

the

rup

def

of t

Bu

Wi

for

Ag

my

De

Co

rou

ma

ers

ria

pit

of

Af

cu

ha

for

by

D

Persians, and was then come to their Succour against him; and being, according to the Astrologers, Lord of his Ascendant when he was Born, he had not taken due care to protect him. Some time before his Death, Libanius, the Sophist, is faid to have ask'd a Christian School-master at Antioch, by way of Derision, What he thought the Carpenter's Son was then a doing? To whom he reply'd, Know those Wretch, that that God who made both Heaven and Earth, and whom in Contempt thou call ft the Carpenter's Son, is preparing a Coffin for thy Disciple Iulian.

His Cha. racter.

As to his Character, even our Christian Writers, who can't be expected inclinable to flatter him, own he enrich'd the Empire with a great many excellent Qualities; that he was Valiant, Chafte, Prudent, Patient of Labour, a great Lover of Learned Men, being himself Learn'd and Eloquent. His Exploits against the Germans were extraordinary, confidering his Youth and his Education, which had prepar'd him more to the Gown than the Sword; on the other Hand his best Friends allow him to have been Superstitious to the highest Degree, hot, talkative and inconfiderate, that he was very much given to Vain-glory and Ostentation, that in many things he was guided more by his own Humour than the Advice of his ablest Counsellors. Defects grew upon him with his Years, which Consideration has made some conceive that he ow'd the extent of his Fame to the shortness of his Life, and that had he liv'd longer, Time and Temptation might possibly have expos'd him to such Infirmities as would have fully'd the Reputation acquir'd in his Youth. Julian dy'd on the 26th of June, in the second Year of his Reign, and two and thirtieth of his Ages in his fourth Confulate, which he bore with Sallust, A. D. 363.

XV. Thus

lave

Way

hou

and ar-

ipte

ers,

wn cel-

TUned

His

ITY,

ich

rd;

to ot,

ich

ny

our

ch

4

fe,

3

nic-

of

b

UŞ.

roops ilsa

XV. Thus fell Julian in the Flower of his Age, Joylan. and full Pursuit of his mighty Defigns, which as none but a Genius like his, bold and imperuous, could ever have fuggested to now there wanted an equal Resolution to purfue and direct em. In him the Constantine Family was extinct, under whose Government the Imperial Power feem'd ftill to retain its native Influence and Vigour. Juffice was duly administer'd, and the Laws of the Empire regularly observ'd throughout the Provinces; and tho' in those Times we meet with frequent Usurpations, they ferv'd rather to awaken than impair the Supream Authority; as all the Motions and Irruptions occasion'd by the barbarous Nations feem defign'd to make a fatal Experience of the Strength of the Empire, rather than to infult or weaken it. But after this the Roman Eagle, that with extended Wings us'd to defend those Nations that fled to her for her Friendship and Protection, ficken'd as with Age, and lay expos'd to the Attempts of every Enemy that dar'd Affault her. we would still only

alway anning the lord of the land

The Sorrow the Army conceiv'd at Julian's Death is unexpressible: They were in a strange Country far from home, with a provok'd Enemy round about 'em, without a Head to direct, command and provide for 'em. The Common Soldiers were ready to Mutiny, and the Officers at Variance about a Successor. At last they unanimously pitch'd upon Sallinst the Præsect, who being a Man of great Worth, and long Experience in Military Affairs, was acceptable to all Parties. But he excusing himself upon the Account of his Age, which had brought many Infirmities upon him, they were forc'd to make a new Election; and being hurry'd by the Distraction of their Affairs, and imminent Dangers to which they were expos'd, the Choice

fell

90 Jovian E- fell upon Fouran, Son of Varrenian, who from le ded.

Emment Post in the Army, where he had beha himfelf like a Brave Commander, was lately ratio to a private Life. Jopian was immediately fa ted by his Electors with the Accemation of ams Augustus, which a great part of the Army tending four Miles in Length miltook, and con ceiving Julian to be miraculously recover'd, out an ill-grounded Hope, join'd in the common Cr till upon a Discovery of their Mistake they turn their Joy into Tears and Lamentations. As fo as fevian was advane'd to the Imperial Dignity an Officer in the Army, who had ferv'd former under his Father, and had carry'd himfelf with much Infolence towards him, being afraid of his Son, who had it now in his Power to revenge hi Father's Quarrel, deferted and fled over to the Ben fians; and being admitted into the King's Presence acquainted him with the Death of Julian, and thu the Army had in a tumultuous manner made Choice of Fovian, a mean spirited Man, for his Suc ceffor. This News was highly acceptable to the Persian King, who thereupon prepar'd his Men to fall vigorously upon the Rear of the Roman Army, who, upon an Encouragement receiv'd from the Entrails of Beafts, were issuing out of their Camp, when they were attack'd by the Persian with their Elephants plac'd in the Front, After resolute Engagement on both sides, which laster for fome time, the Persiant gave Ground, leaving two of their Elephants, and a great number of Men dead upon the Place. The Remans loft three Principal Officers, and some Soldiers, and after they had giv'n 'em as good a Burial as the Exigency of their Affairs would allow of they proceeded to a Castle call'd Sama. Here they encamp'd the next Day, in the best manner they could, drawing a Li but Stan

Vo.

to b Em ver and to 1 Day wh the Bat tarc fort

ing the den

be ! tor fari

alw of. En

def im Inf

Wit fon

and the to the me

Ar lea try

tak

XLIV. Jovian. Chap. I.

Line round their Camp for their better Defence; but were however infelted by the Enemy at a distance, a Party of whole Horse had the Confidence to break into the Camp, and had almost reach'd the Emperor's Tent, but were at last repuls'd with a very great Lofs. The Night following they dislode'd, and came to Charche, from whence they removed to Dura, where they were forc'd to continue four Days through the Obstinacy of the Persiant, who whenever they were in Motion press'd hard upon their Rear, but when they fac'd about to give em Battel retreated, and by this means very much tetarded them in their March, Here they were inform'd by fome, who pretended to be more knowing than the rest, that they were not now far from the Roman Borders, and therefore the whole Army A Mutiny demanded, in a peremptory manner, that they might in the Arz be permitted to pass over the Tigris, which the Empefor and the chief Officers very prudently oppos'd, affuring 'em the River at that Season of the Year was always (woln higher than usual, that the greatest part of 'em were ignorant of Swimming, and that the Enemy was ready on the other fide to reward fuch desperate Adventures with Death. But they were impatient of Contradiction, and infifted with great Infolence upon their Demands, which they mingl'd with Menaces, and thereby forc'd the Emperor in fome measure to comply. He order'd the Germans and the Ganls to take the River first, boping, if they perish'd in the Attempt, the rest would learn to be more tractable, and if they got fafe a-shore the whole Army might venture after 'em with more Confidence. Hereupon some of the greatest Artists among em, who from their Childhood had learnt to Swim over vaft Rivers in their own Country, were alotted out for this Expedition; they taking the Advantage of the Night reach'd the oppolite

Vol

tant .

the (

Arti

Fam

wer

than

who

Arm

of no

Caff

rum

WOL

Thi

desc

fy'd

ing

the

felf, Wh

ther

who Perj

to

shar

Kin

a C

By.

ces,

lioce

and

nia

ta.

exc

diti

Me

of t

posite Shore sooner than was imagin'd, and have kill'd the Persians that were plac'd there for a Gubby a Signal gave the Army notice of their Succession who were so impatient to follow 'em, that the would hardly allow time for the making a Brid which some had undertaken to compose of Bladd for their more convenient Transportation.

Whilst the Romans were busied in this extra gant Project, the King of Persia, who during Absence, and now upon his Return to his Am had by repeated Messengers been inform'd of the desperate Valour of the Romans, who instead of ing dispirited at the Loss of Julian, were grow more hardy, by continual Labours and Dangers, in had kill'd him a great many brave Men, and unusual number of Elephants, began to listen to Thoughts of an Accommodation. He was unwil ling to enrage 'em too much, not knowing how far the Thirst of Revenge, and Fury of Delpa might thrust 'em. He knew fresh Supplies might be rais'd out of the Neighbouring Provinces, and that an Army lay ready in Mesopotamia little inferior to this. He was sensible how his own Men were continually harras'd, his Country wasted, the Strength of his Army impair'd, and his Subjects in general defirous of a Peace. The Author of the Alexandrine Chronicle faith, the first Overtures of Peace were made by him before he had heard of Julian's Death. Others, that he made mention of it at first only to try the Temper of the Roman Army, and the Inclinations of their new Prince; and when he found 'em' both alike eagerly defirous of a Peace, he prolong'd the Negotiations from time to time, that the Romans, whilst they stood expecting the Result of the Treaty, might spend the small Remainder of their Provisions, and so be forc'd through Famine to comply with his Exorbi-

tant

OW

190 n to

wilhow

pair ght and

nfe-

/len

the

s in

the

of

of

Ar

nd

of

me

he.

be

biint

tant Demands. This is not unlikely, if we confider the Condition the Roman Army was then in, and the Articles upon which the Peace was concluded. The Famine rag'd fo difmally in their Camp, that they were ready to end their Days by the Sword, rather than wait a painful lingring Death. And Sapor, who pretended he permitted the Remnant of Julian's Army to retreat out of mere Pity, made a Demand of no less than five Provinces, together with fifteen Castles, besides Nisibis, Singara, and Castra Maurorum, a Fort of very great Consequence, before he would hearken to any Terms of Accommodation. This the Emperor was forc'd shamefully to con- A Peace descend to by a Company of Flatterers, who terri-concluded. fy'd him with the Name of Procopius, as if he hearing of Julian's Death would take the Advantage of the Army under his Command, and fet up for himfelf, unless fovian speedily return'd to prevent him. Which indeed was no unlikely Prefumption, and was therefore more readily liften'd to by the Emperor, who with great Difficulty prevail'd with the King of Persia to permit the Inhabitants of Nisibis and Singara to be remov'd into the Roman Territories; and shamefully engag'd himself never to affist Arfaces King of Armenia against the Persians, tho' Arsaces was a Christian, and a faithful Friend to the Empire. By which means Sapor had his Revenge upon Arfaces, who at the Emperor's Instance had wasted Chiliocomus, for he took him Prisoner some time after, and the Parthians seiz'd on the greatest Part of Armenia bordering on the Medes, together with Artaxa-The Peace being concluded, Hostages were exchang'd on both Sides, for Performance of Conditions; on the Roman Part, Nevitta, Victor, and Mellobandes; on the Persian, Bineses, and three other of the Principal among the Nobility.

The

Vol

to F

W25

fo 1

CON

of N

an I

For

ferv

De

Ron

to I

fart

for Cou

as v

to p

fom

on t

of S

who

ritis

Pur

gali

Sebi

the!

con

en

Cor

fom

ted

mor

The Conclusion of this Peace, which was for thirty Years, was as remarkable a Pallage a of those Times, and occasion'd various Refle upon it, manag'd variously according to the rent Temper of those Writers who have write it. All allow it to have been shameful and ign nious, forafmuch as the Romans, the they often ceiv'd notable Defeats, could never be prevail d to relinquish any of their Territories before. 9 fay Jevian ought not to have fubmitted to it thers, that he did well in accepting of it, but bound to observe it no longer than 'till he fe himself in a capacity of breaking it. Ammianus fails that during the Treaty he might eafily have mare ed into Corduena, a fertile Country within his or Dominions, and diffrant but a hundred Miles for the Place where the Army lay. If they could h made fo fafe a Retreat without a Truce they we certainly have done it, and not have hazarded the felves in that dangerous Passage over the River, Account of which we have in express Words for Inlian, who to give every one his due, by his obstinate Proceedings made the Retreat neces fary, is condemn'd by him and feveral other Auch for burning his Ships, and thereby cutting of Security of a Retreat into his own Dominions; which would not have been, had the Retreat been now ! easie and possible as he would have it. The Arm as we shall find hereafter, arriv'd at Nisibis with go Toil and Labour after the Conclusion of the Perc which permitted 'em to return at their Eafe: Ho then must they have broke thro' those Mukitude of Persians which surrounded em on every side be fore the Conclusion of the Treaty? And yet did the not appear half to terrible as the Famine. The Confiderations feem to make the Truce necessary which was the only Means the Emperor had left Chap. I. KLIV. ... jovian.

to preserve the Remainder of the Army: And as he was fore do conclude it for the Safety of his Men, so was he oblight by his own Honour after it was concluded to observe it, and not have made an ignominious Breach of Faith, and violated the Laws of Nations. He was not acquainted with that Maxim so prevalent in our Days with the Most Christian Princes, That no Treaties, how solemnly soever enter'd into and religiously ratify'd, ought to be in Force, when they grow disadvantagious in the Observance, and are a Curb to any aspiring ambitious

Mary Strain and the Market Column Defigns. The Peace being confirm'd on both Sides, the Romans pass'd the River, and came by long Marches to Hatra, an old Town in the Middle of the Defart: Here being inform'd that they were to march for Seventy Miles together through a dry barren Country, where no Water was to be had but fuch as was fale or funk, nor any thing to feed on but bitter unwholesome Herbs, the Emperor took care to provide the Army with sweet Water, and order'd fome Camels to be kill'd, to make the best Provision they could. Which being done, they profecuted their Retreat, and after a tirefome dangerous March of Six Days they arriv'd at Ur, a Persian Fortress. where Cassianus Governor of Mesopotamia, and Manritius a Tribune, who had been fent before for that Purpose, met 'em with such Provisions as the Frugality of the Army commanded by Precepins and Sebastian had been able to spare 'em. From hence the Emperor dispatch'd some, in whom he could most confide, into the West, there to improve and strengthen his Interest the best they could, sending secret Commissions by 'em, by vertue of which he remov'd some whom he had Reason to suspect, and substituted others in their Places, who he judg'd would be more faithful to him. He order'd thefe his Agents

left

the

mai

in :

En

hav

wh

Pul

ing

a Si Perj

perc

jur'

faid of h

Such

ger fron

not but tore

ces,

TOMS

no p

Cro

upor

grea

thou

man

and who to ki

a mo

every

and I

T

to report every thing to the best Advantage found how the Generality of the People approv his Advancement, and in what degree they flo fected to him; after which they were feet return with the best Intelligence they coul that the Emperor might take fuch Measures in Council, as should be judg'd most proper for Service. Tho' these Messengers set forward v all Expedition, Fame had got the start of 'em, had alarm'd the Provinces with a melancholy count of the Persian Affairs; especially they at A fibis receiv'd it with the greatest Confusion, wh they were inform'd their City was to be furrender up to Sapor, from whom they could expect no Me cy, having so often withstood him with so much Resolution, and destroy'd so many of his Men.

In the mean time the Army was again in want of all manner of Provisions, which was once more fur ply'd with the Flesh of their Carriage-Beasts, the only Means left to fave that of one another, with fo much Fury did the Famine rage among'em. At Thilfaphata, Procopins and the general Officers of his Army came to wait upon the Emperor, who receive 'em very graciously. From thence they march'd or to Nisibis, in fight of which, when they were arrived, they pitch'd their Tents without the City. The Emperor, tho' earnestly importun'd by the Inhabi tants to lodge in the Palace, as his Predecessor used to do, refus'd it with great Obstinacy, out of Shame to fuffer a City fo ftrong and impregnable to be deliver'd up to an enrag'd Enemy, whilft he was residing in it. The next Day Bineses, according to his Master's Orders, and in pursuance of the Conditions of Peace, demanded the City to be delivered up to him, and accordingly enter'd by the Emptror's Permission, and took Possession of it in the King of Persia's Name. He had no sooner seiz'd on the

with and Ac-Ac-View here lered Mer-nuci

313 it of

the

with

Ac f his

eiv d

d on

The

abi-

Mon

ur of

Was

g to

Con

ver'd

npc-

the

d on

the

the Place, but by a Signal from the Castle he commanded the Citizens to quit their Habitations; who in a most passionate manner earnestly befought the Emperor not to be forc'd into foreign Parts, but have liberty to desend the Place of their Nativity, which they undertook to do without putting the Publick to any Charge in their Assistance, assirming they were well acquainted with the Fatigues of a Siege, and knew how to withstand the enrag'd Persians. But all this was to no purpose, the Emperor insisting still upon his Promise, and how perjur'd he must be if he broke it.

Hereupon Sabinus, an eminent Man in the Town. faid boldly, That Constantius, in the whole Courfe of his Wars against the Persians, the once driven to such great Seraiss in his Flight, as to satisfie his Humger with a Crust of Brend, which he had begg'd from an old Woman, yet to his dying Day would not suffer a Foot of his Territories to be alienated; but Iovian, before he was scarce saluted Emperor, tore from the Empire the very Buhwark of his Provinces, which had hitherto been protected by the vigorous Opposition of this Town. But when all was to no purpose, the Emperor still urging the Sandicy of his Oath, and they had prefented him with a Crown, which after much Entreaty he was prevail'd upon to accept of, one Sylvanus an Advocate with great Confidence cry'd out, So, O Emperor, may ft thou be crowned by the rest of the Cities.

This so highly incens'd him, that he strictly commanded the Town to be evacuated within three Days, and order'd a Party of Soldiers to drive 'em out, who threaten'd those that were the most unwilling to kill 'em if they soiter'd. The Sun never beheld a more melancholy Sight than was then at Nishis, every Corner of the City was fill'd with Groans and Lamentations, in which all Ages and Conditions

join'd;

join'd; the Walls and Streets were crowded wie ferable Multitudes, that wept and exclaim'd as they were then to be deliver'd into the Hand Death, and were all to be Executioners to each ther; the helpless Women embrac'd the Doors Posts of the Houses at their Farewel, with as much real Passion, as if they were going to be torn fro what was dearest to 'em, their Husbands or their Children, who flood by and help'd to fill up the measure of Grief in which they had so large a share; whilst the Men, who at the Expence of their Live had so often defended the Walls, and repell'd the Enemy, curs'd a Peace, that was now depriving 'en of that which their Valour had made good against the most violent Attacks of a bloody and obstinate War. The Roads were fill'd with these desolute Exiles, loaden with what they could most conveniently bear away themselves, but being expell'd in hafte, and for want of the Convenience of Carriage, they left feveral Things more in Quantity, and of greater Value behind 'em. The greatest Part of em in this forlorn Condition were conducted to Amida, the Suburbs of which City were given 'en by the Emperor to inhabit; the rest were dispers'd into other Parts, where fuch Care as the Necellity of the Publick Affairs would admit of, was taken somite accept of , one , i

After this Procopius was sent to attend Julius's Corps to Tarsus, in the Suburbs of which City he was bury'd, according to the Orders he had given in his Life-time. After the Funeral Ceremonics were over, Procopius privately withdrew from Tarsus, and tho' diligent Enquiry was made in all Part for him, he never could be heard of, 'till he appear'd publickly at Constantinople a long time after, where he assum'd the Imperial Purple, as shall be shown in its proper Place.

From

no

DI

th

cia

di

of

be

Ta

len

int

Va

ftr

the

por

For

at I

Bit

the

ject

of l

oth

coal

pute

he v viol Dea

to C

fant

Din

abou

Reli

lice i

Belie

H

are; iyes

em Link

mate

olate

ave-

d in

d of

t of

d to

'em

ers'd

Hity

aken

CO.

into s

y he

iven

onics

Tar

i AP

ster,

Il be

rom

From Nybinthe Emperor welle directly to Amioch, where leveral Prodigies are faid to appear, de Ammian. nouncing the Wrath of Heav'n, which haften'd For gian's Departure from thence, to that he spar'd neither Man nor Beaft till he arrived at Turius in Cilicia; at which Place the Messengers he had before dispatch'd into the West met him, and were some of 'em fent back with fresh Instructions, for the better Settlement of Affairs in those Parts. From Tarfus he proceeded on to Anorra, where in as folemn a manner as the Time would permit, he enter'd into the Confulship, assuming for Collegue his Son A. D. Varronian, a very Infant, who by his crying and struggling, not suffering himself to be carry'd in the Confular Chair, as Custom requir'd, feem'd to portend what happen'd in a very short time after: For proceeding on towards Constantinople he arrived at Badastana, a Town situate upon the Borders of Bithynia and Galatia, where he was found dead in Jovian the Night. His Death gave occasion to many Con- Dies. jectures; some fay he was stifled by the Dampness of his Chamber, which had been newly platter d; others, that he was choak'd by the Vapours of Charcoal, plac'd there to dry the Room; and some imputed his sudden Death to a Surfeit Zonaras faith he was poison'd with Mushrooms, fand Ammianus himself seems to be of Opinion, that he came to a wiolent End, when he compares the Manner of his Death to that of Scipio Emilianus, who, according to Cicero, was murder'd by Night in his Bed. 1 b'11

He is said in many things to have imitated Con-His Chaflantius; for he usually dispatch'd Business after rather.

Dinner, and low'd to discourse merrily with those about him. He was a great Friend to the Christian Religion, protecting the Christians from the Malice of the Heathens, and defending the Orthodox

Believers against the Arian Hereticks; the he often

H 2 declar'd

declar'd he hated all Disputes, and had a great I steem for those who promoted a Union in the Church. He had fo, great a Veneration for alth nafius, that he defind him to fend him a Form Faith, which as a Rule might preferve him fre falling into Error: Whereupon Athanafus fummon a Synod at Alexandria, where they unanimously agreed upon a Creed, conformable to that of Nice to which they all subscrib'd, and transmitted it to the Emperor. He was sometimes magnificent, to lerably well learn'd, affable and courteous. By the few Officers he preferr'd during his short Reign we may judge how careful he would have been in his Promotions, had he liv'd longer. The unlucky Peace he made with the Persians, is the only Intrance the Writers of that Age have given us of his Cow ardice or Imprudence, in other Respects he behaved himself like a Man of Courage and Experience. He was a great Eater, and given much to Wine and Women, which Faults Ammianus thinks the Sense of his high Condition would in time have corrected. His Father is faid to have foreseen in a Dream his Son's future Advancement, which he discover'd to two of his intimate Friends; adding, that he him felf should in time attain the Honour of the Confulate. In this last he was deceiv'd, for he heard in deed of his Son's exalted Fortune, but never live to fee him afterwards, or enjoy the Honour the Em peror had defign'd him, which was therefore trans ferr'd to his Grandson Verronianus, as we observe before. Jovian dy'd on the 17th of February, in the 33d Year of his Age, after he had Reign'd le ven Months and twenty Days, A. D. 364.

VALENTI-NIAN. XVI. The Body of the deceas'd Emperor being prepar'd with the accustom'd Rites, was in a solemn Manner convey'd to Constantinople, there to be In-

terr'd

f

al

tr

C

bo

de

fi

E

MA

bu

dy

IJU

T

ch

w vio

We

dif

get

the

'til

Ar

his

Sol

fro

at .

me

his the

the

ness

giv

terr'd with his Predeceffors. His Reign had been fo very short, and consequently his Subjects so little acquainted either with his Virtues or Vices that they had no reason to lament much, or rejoice at his Death. The Army some time after dislode'd from Badastana, and proceeded to Nite, the Metropolis of Bithynia, where all the Officers, both Civil and Military, enter'd into a ferious Debate bout the Election of a new Prince, some of 'em not despairing of that high Dignity themselves. The first that was whisper'd, rather than nam'd, was Equitins a Tribune, but he being of a furly rultick Temper was immediately rejected. Then was 74nuarius, a Relation of Jovian's, propos'd by a few, but they who disapproved of the Election had a ready Reason for it, for he being then Commander in Illyricum was too far off. At length Falentinian, a Valentini-Tribune in the Army, was by Universal Consent an chosen chosen Emperor; he was at that time at Ancyra, Emperor. where he had been left with Orders to follow 70vian: Immediately upon the Election Mellengers were dispatch'd away for him, but being at such a distance there was an Inter-regnum for ten Days together. However Equiries and Leo had Orders from the rest of the Officers to take care of his Interest 'till his Arrival, and prevent any Innovations in the Army. Valentinian was Born at Cibale in Pannonia; his Father was Sirnam'd Funacius, for that Pive Soldiers together were not able to wrest a Rope from him, which he held in his Hand. He arriv'd at Nice to foon as he was inform'd of his Advancement, but would not appear abroad the Day after his Arrival, because it was the Biffestile, a Day for the most part unlucky to the Romans, and therefore they generally declin'd entring on any great Business upon it. Towards the Evening Orders were given, by the Advice of Sallast the Profect, that H 3

nce

and

to

im

fu-

in-

vid

m ank

In-

rr'd

al

E

da

Bo

th

m

gu

to

WE

all

be

len

If,

ma

Re

the

ber

fen

ent

mo W

fult

foly

Ma

Bro

wit

this

ver,

prel

Wite

Enc

cion

no Person whatsoever of the first Rank, or who was fuspected to aim at the Empire, should Pain of Death be feen abroad the next Morning but as foon as it was Light the whole Army drawn up together, and Valentinian adorn'd wit the Imperial Robes, and saluted Augustus, ascend ed the Tribunal, from whence as he was going to address himself in a Speech to the Army, land ftretch'd forth his Hand the better to gain their Attention, the ordinary Soldiers requir'd him b Seditious Murmurs to chuse a Collegue. The at first was thought to have been done at the Instigation of some who had been defeated in their Pretentions to the Empire; but the Noise continuing, and the Soldiers appearing more Bold and Violent, there was great reason to apprehend an U. niverfal Tumult; which Valentinian having greater Motives than any elfe to fear, and if possible to prevent, with Looks full of Authority he again extended his Hand, boldly reproved those who appear'd the most forward and seditious, and the without any Interruption deliver'd himself in the

His Speech Terms to the Army. Some Days since it was a to the Ar-your Power to chuse whom you thought sit to be my.

your Emperor, but since your Knowledge of me, and my Method of Life has encouraged you to rule my Method of Life has encouraged you to rail me up to that high Dignity, I must tell you, you have passed the Power out of your own Hands, nor are you to prescribe Laws to your Soveraign. Tis now my Business to Command, and your Duty to Obey. I know as well as you, that the State of Affairs, and the Condition of the Empire requires an Associate, whom, as soon as I find to convenient, I intend to chuse and nominates in the mean time you may expect to find me a sender and careful Prince, as I shall expect from you all Offices of Submission and Obedience; come therefore and receive the Donative, which Custom and my Bove towards you has made your due.

there

By this resolute Speech Valentinian gain'd his Ends upon the whole Army, not one among 'em dar'd appear to hardy as to oppose a Man who feem'd Born to Command; with a general Acclamation they faluted him Augustus, and conducted him in Royal Pomp to the Imperial Palace, where he fummon'd together the general Officers, refolving to be guided by fuch Councils as appear'd most beneficial to the Empire, and not be influenc'd by fuch as were more agreeable to himself. When they were all met, he ask'd 'em whom they thought fittest to be his Affociate in the Empire. After a general Silence for some time, Dagalaiphus boldly answer'd. If, Sir, you are partial to your own Family, you will make Choice of your Brother; but if you have any Regard to the Publick Good, you will fix on some other. Valentinian was inwardly nettl'd at the Liberty of this Speech, however he conceal'd his Refentments, and fet out for Nicomedia, which he enter'd on the first of March; from thence he remov'd to Constantinople, where reflecting on the Weight of his Affairs, and how unable he was to fustain so vast a Burden without an Assistant, the refolv'd no longer to defer it; so on the first of March, without any Opposition, he declar'd his Brother Valens Augustus, who was received as such Makes his with an Universal Approbation. Some time after Brother his this both Emperors were feiz'd with a violent Fea-the Empire. ver, which according to Ammianus made 'em apprehend some foul Play, as if they had been bewitch'd by Julian's Friends; but upon a diligent Enquiry the thing came to nothing, for they could not discover the least Grounds for such a Suspicion, and the ar all the art many days of the

h THE

In

bar

nti-

and U.

alte

gain who

hen

hele

5 12 h

and

aifi you

de;

Du

the

pire dit

di

ten

7.00

ame

ert-

H 4

threw oways to the more more than we want

They

bound his Hands, and left him at Liberty to reco ver what he faid had formerly been wrested from Constantinople, where they provided for the better

Victualling that City and Rome, by regulating the Officers who had the Management of the Public

The two Emperors continu'd thirty Days at Vole They were scarce recover'd before the wh Empire was in a manner alarm'd with a general ! valion from the barbarous Nations; the Germ were in a cruel manner walting Gaul and Rhen the Sarmate and Quadi, Pannonia; the Picts, Sa and Saxons miferably infested Britain; the Me grew more outragious in Africk than ever, and Goths as cruelly behav'd themselves in Thrace; no could the late Peace restrain the King of Perfe who again laid Claim to Armenia, pretending the Truce was made with Jovian, whose Death un

U

A

Gn

fet

len

Pa

lai

Ge

the

his

mo

lin

kne

cop

De

of

fro

Da

all !

eny

Wit

wh

and

his

to

all

ftra

וסער

the

put

not שעו

by

mad

to

Pro

and

Ulage

his Predecessors.

Corn. From thence, when the Winter was over, they pass'd through Thrace to Naissas, in the Suburbs of which, distant three Miles from the City, and call'd Mediana, being upon the Point of feparating they made a Partition of their Officers. Valenti nian made Choice of Jovinus and Dagalaiphus. V. ctor, Arintheus and Seronianus were to attend Va lens into the East, and at Sirmium they parted, Valentinian for Milan, and Valens for Constantinople upon their Arrival at which Cities they both took the Confular Ornaments. All this Year the Empire was grievoully burden'd and infulted. The German Ambassadors, sent as the Custom was once a Year to Court, were roughly treated by Urfaire. who by his Office was to receive and answer all Ambassadors, and being an obstinate angry Man fent them back with less Presents than were usually given; which upon their Return their Principal threw away in Indignation, and provok'd by the

A. D. 365.

Ulage of their Amballators, in great Rage took Arms, and broke through the Borders. At the fame time, or not much after, Prospins began to Procepius fet up for himself in the East; of all which Va- fett up for lentinian was inform'd, as he was travelling towards Paris, about the beginning of November. Dagelaiphus was fent with a powerful Army against the Germans, who, after they had done what Mischief they could, retreated, not waiting for Degelaphas his Arrival. The Rebellion of Procepius was of a more difficult Nature, whom Valentinian was willing, if possible, to crush in the Beginning, but knew not whether his Brother was alive, or Procopius had affum'd the Imperial Title upon his. Death; fo lame was the Account Equition fent him of this Matter, who had receiv'd his Information from one Anthony, commanding in the Mid-land Dacia. He had a Mind to march into Illyricum with all Expedition, and prevent the Usurper, if he had any Defigns upon Pannonia; for he well remembered with what speed Falian over-ran all those Parts, when he had declar'd himself against Constanting, and usurp'd the Imperial Title, and how serviceable his extraordinary and unexpected Diligence prov'd to him: But his Friends about him dissuaded him all they could from that Refolution; they remonftrated to him, How by leaving the West, Gaul would unavoidably be exposed to the Intoads of the Barbarians; in this they were affifted by Deputies from the Cities, who earnestly befought him not to for take 'em in fo great an Extremity, but awe the Germans by his Presence, and restrain em by the Terror of his Name. These Arguments made him change his Mind, and prevail'd upon him to comply with their Requests. He consider'd Procopins was an Enemy to no more than himself and his Brother, whereas the Germans were declar'd the hey made on the Party

ted,

Em-

mee

ring.

r all

Man ally pas

fage

he

do

teg

tin

nat

H

aft

Pe

and

pro

de

and

equ

his

ny

De

fine

 \mathbf{D}

a C

not

Ad

for

the

upo

Spr

Art

to I

wea

to f upo

per

a ft

to d

who

of t

at C

copi

clar'd Enemies to the whole Roman Empire, resolv'd therefore not to stir out of Gaul, but we and resided at Rheims; where taking the Affairs of Africk into Consideration, and to prevent any suden Attempt that might be made upon those Parts, fent away Neotherius and others, whose Care it was to keep all quiet there.

In the mean time Procopius was very bufie Constantinople, where his Affairs feem'd to be in tolerable Condition. He was Born of a great F mily in Cilicia, where he had been educated; being nearly related to Julian, he from his Yout met with more than common Esteem. He was Man of few Words, for the most part very close and referv'd; tho' he had been bred a Heather yet in Constantins his Time he was made first Notary, after that a Tribune in respect to his In grity, being reputed a good Moral Man. Whe Fulian came to be Emperor he was preferr'd to higher Dignities, and gave some, who more mo rowly enquir'd into him, occasion to think he would be ready, if ever it came into his Power, to diftur the Publick Peace. Being fent to attend Julius Corps to Tarfus, as we observed before, he private ly withdrew from thence for fear of Jovian, whole Jealousie he had great reason to suspect, for that it was whisper'd abroad that Julian had nam'd him for his Successor at his Death; and he knew that Fovian had upon his Advancement put one of his own Name to Death, for no other reason but be cause a few Soldiers had propos'd him as worth the Empire. For a long time he led a melancholy Life in folitary remote Places, with great Gare woiding the Industry of those whom Fevian had fent to enquire strictly after him, without Company or Sustenance labouring under the utmost Renury; but grown weary of so desolate a Condition, he stole fecretly into the Parts adjacent to Chalcedon, and concealing himself in the House of Strain tegius, a trusty Friend, he went oft to Constant tinople, where his mean Habit and meagre Countenance made him unknown to the most curious Eye. Here, like a cunning Spy, he enquir'd diligently after News, and was well pleas'd to hear how the People generally complain'd of Valens for Injustice Valens in and Oppression, to which he was continually no Favour with the prompted by his Father-in-Law Petronius, a Man People. deform'd both in Body and Mind, fo Cruel, Covetous and Inexorable, that like a Wild Beaft he rag'd equally against the Innocent and the Guilty. These his violent Proceedings, by which he had ruin d many Persons of all forts, in his severe Inquisitions after Debts that had been owing to the Publick ever fince the Reign of Aurelian, created a general Diflike to the present Government, and a Defire of a Change, which highly pleas'd Procopius, who did not despair of improving it one Day to his own Advantage. Valens was about this time preparing for his Expedition into Syria, the better to oppose the King of Persia, who seem'd to have a Design upon Armenia; and about the beginning of the Spring the Emperor fet forward with a very good Army, whose Absence seem'd much to contribute to Procopius his Ambition, who at length grown weary of his private Necessities, and preferring Death to fo forlorn, uncomfortable a Life, rashly ventur'd upon a bold and desperate Undertaking. The Emperor at his Departure out of Bithynia had detach'd a strong Party of Horse and Foot from his Army to defend Thrace from the Incursions of the Goths, who he was inform'd delign'd to Invade it. Part of this Detachment was in their March Quarter'd at Constantinople, and to some of the Officers Procopius had the Courage to discover himself and his close

25-1

hen,

late her

mate

ould

turb

i del

vate

hofe

atik

him

that

his

be

rthy

noly

e a

had

mo enu-

100,

he

Intentions, and after many Promises of mighty

Beg

rca

ain

Haz

y c

hei

ant

o fi

ure

om

rov

ubn

his

rigu

001 ople

omi

es t

Vebi

o hi

ople.

pon

r co

Fhir

roco

f th reat

eror

ransi ept (

ulio

vere

hilf

urge

Deat

By

IS A

Ujurps.

wards, they undertook to fecure all that Party his Interest; accordingly the next Day they drawn up at the Anastatian Baths, where Pro us was prefented to 'em, and appear'd more li Ghost than one fit for any noble or dangerous U Procopius dertaking. He was cloath'd in an Embroide Coat like a Courtier, having nothing of a Sold about him but a Pike, which he bore in his Ri Hand, having thrown a Purple Coat over his L Arm, and indeed appear'd like a Player, represe ing that Dignity he was going to usurp. In ridiculous Figure he address'd himself in a fawni Speech to the Soldiers, and implor'd their Affiftance who receiv'd him with Promises of Protection and a Show of Honour, conducting him public into the City, where he was neither oppos'd encourag'd by the Inhabitants, either for that in were fond of a Change, or out of a Detellation to Petronius his Extortions. Having ascended the Tribunal, he observ'd a deep Amazement in the Face of the People, which was attended with extraordinary a Silence; this threw him into great Perplexity, for he now thought he was a riv'd at the end of his former Wishes, Death n ther than fo miserable a Life, and therefore sto Speechless for some time. Recovering by degree a little Courage, he made the Multitude a confut Speech, more agreeable to the Distractions of hi Mind than the Exigencies of his Affairs, and answer'd first by the Applause of a few among hired for that purpose, and afterwards by the Ac clamations of the rest, who in a tumultuous mann gave him the Title of Emperor. This Ceremon being over they hurry'd him away to the Palac attended by none but the meaner fort, and mol profligate of the People. From fo contemptible Beginning ike U der igh igh Le sen rh

ance

tio lid

i no

atio

d th

n the

ch s ito i

IS N

ftool gree fust

of hi

d we

e Ac

anne

alao

ible i

seginning did he by Degrees raise himself up to so reat a height, as to be able for forme time to mainin his Ufurpation, to the no fmall Expence and Jazard of the State. Some Days after he was join'd y others of the better Sort, invited to it either by heir own Inclinations, or the Prospect of great Adantages. And that no Artifices might be wanting o support his Designs, several Persons at the Prourement of Procopius impudently affirm d they were ome out of Ganl; that Valentinian was dead in that rovince, and the People were generally willing to ubmit to the new Prince. The better to colour his Imposture, Nebridius, whom Petronius his Inrigues had got to be made Prefettus Praterio in the oom of Salluft, and Cafarius, Prefect of Confrantiople, were both imprison'd; and lest Julius, who ommanded in Thrace, should be able with the Fores under him to crush the Rebellion in its Birth. Vebridius was with great Menaces forc'd to write o him in Valens his Name to halten to Constantiople, there to affift the Emperor with his Advice pon very weighty Affairs; whither he was no foonr come, but he was likewife thrown into Prison. Things proceeding thus far according to his Withes, recopins began to alter and new-model the Officers f the Court, fome courting and purchasing at a reat Expense Employments under this Mock-Emeror; others, who beheld em as no other than ransitory Pageants, were compelled by Force to acept of 'em; and as it is usual in such intestine Conulions, some from the very Dregs of the People vere advanced to Offices of Honour and Profit, hilft others of Noble Birth, great Possessions, and rge Endowments, were either Banish'd or put to than to the contra

By these Arts Procopius imagin'd he had settled is Affairs upon a reasonable Foundation, and began

be

th

be

Al

nu

to

mi

25

Par

fan

on dec

Sw

one

his.

ally

him

Enf

to h

App

as th

that

ceffi

mita

Ord

pedi

Party

Siego

Itinai

want whic

y ur

to think of an Army, whereby he might defe Dignity he had thus happily acquired; and in he fucceeded according to his Wish, for all the Tro which were design'd for Thrate readily swore A giance to him, and bound themselves under the verest Execuations to be firm and faithful; this did with more Chearfulness upon fight of Confe tius his little Daughter, whom Procopius broug forth in his Arms to 'em, for this reminded 'em their Affections to that Prince, and Procopius his R lation to Julian; nor were they a little animan when they beheld Faustina, the Child's Mother, either delignedly, or elfe upon fome other accide tal Occasion, had that Day put on the Imperial Ha bit. After this he dispatch'd several Persons to mike fure of Illyricum, who went arm'd with nothing he for fo great an Enterprize, but a groundless Impu dence, and a few of this new Emperor's Medik and were therefore feiz'd by Aquitius, who commanded in those Parts, and tortur'd to Death. These Proceedings made . Equities apprehend the like Treatment from the Enemy, if ever he should fall into their Hands; whereupon he fortify'd all the Northern Passages, and thereby defeated the Usurper's Designs upon Illyricam, wherein he did the Emperor a very great piece of Service.

Valens upon the first Account of these Common ons resolv'd to return, and ruin Procopius, e'er he was able to make too great a Head against him; and was now in Galatia, where he heard of the Usurper's unexpected Progress; the News of which distracted him to that Degree, that in great Consternation he resolv'd to quit the Imperial Purple, but was prevented by those about him, who with powerful Arguments encourag'd him to the contrary, and persuaded him to detach two Parties, who were to march before, and break into the Camp of the Rebels.

bels. At Mygdas, a Town in Phrygia, fituate on the River Singarius, they met Procopius, who had been at Nice, and to those who before had sworn Allegiance to him had added fuch a promiscuous number of Fugitives and Deferters, as were willing to try their Fortunes with him; and when both Armies were ready to engage, stepping boldly forward, as if he was going to challenge one of the adverse Party to a fingle Combat, he took Vitaliams, one A Party of the Officers, by the Hand, accorded him with a fent against familiar and gentle Salutation in Latin, and whilst all Procopius on each Side were in a Suspence, he mildly upbrai- him. ded him and his Fellow-Soldiers, for drawing their Swords in the behalf of a Pannonian Thief, against one ally'd to the Family of Constantine the Great, who defir'd nothing but to be restor'd to the Rights of his Royal Progenitors. By this Speech he so effectually infinuated himself into em, that they who came arm'd with Resolutions to fight and destroy him, were mollify'd in a moment, and vailing their Enfigns, in token of their Defection, pass'd over to his Party; where with loud Acclamations they faluted him Emperor, conducting him with general Approbation to the Imperial Pavilion; and affirming, as the Custom was among the Soldiers in those Cases, that Procopius was invincible.

Alle elechey fran ught Reuted who den-

He

make

gfi

npu-

com

like d fall

1 the

J fur

the

moti-

e was

d wa

per's

acted

nike

pre-

re to

Re

bels.

This Defection brought a very seasonable Accession to the Strength of Proceeding, who sent Remitalca, a Tribune, and one of the Deserters, with Orders to seize on Nice, which he did with all Expedition. Valent detach'd Vadomarius with a strong Party to recover it, whilst he went and laid close Siege to Chalcedon, where he met with a very oblishinate Resistance, and beginning to grow in great, want of Provisions he was forc'd to decamp; softwhich they in Nice having Notice, made a bold Salvy under the Conduct of Ruminalca, and bearing down

der

esca

and in a fter

fed

fair

not

man

eftir

red

whe

pret

Age

he g ion.

Wou

ver

ble

Prov

and I

coun to hi

prop

wher

cruit

of Va

ens h

Arm

whic Def

pectin

erfe

T

Valens in down all before 'em had certainly furpriz'd the peror, had he not upon timely Notice of their fign fav'd himfelf by the Lake of Sunana, and Windings of the River Gallie. By this mean Bithynia fell into the Hands of Preceping, and Jo remov'd with all Expedition to Autyra, where was inform'd that Lapicinus was marching with fiderable Forces out of the East to his Affistar Upon this Encouragement he fent Arintheus, an perienc'd Commander, against the Rebels; who ceeded as far as Dadastana before he mer with Resistance, but was there opposed by one Hyp chins, with whom as a despicable Fellow disdain to fight, he fent Orders to his own Men to by on their Leader and bind him, which they did cordingly. In the mean time Procopius had laid Si to Greicus, in which the Treasure, brought form ly out of Nicomedia to pay the Army that had ved in the East, was at prefent lodg'd; upon wh account the Usurper had great Reason to have Eye upon that City, by which, if he could take he might join the Hellespont to Bithynia. Sero nus was then in the Town, and made the best D fence he could. He chain'd up the Haven, and kept out the Enemies Ships, and very much gall the Affailants from the Walls. This Resolution the Defendants was a very great Obstacle to Proce as his Proceedings, and he had rais'd the Siege for the couragious Attempt of one Alife a Tribe who with much Danger and an undaunted Refe tion contriv'd a way to cut the Chain; in Com deration of which bold Exploit he had afterwa his Pardon, and was continu'd in his Employm the' they proceeded with great Severity against reft of the Rebels Processus being by this m become Mafter of Cyzicus, pardon'd all the Befie except Seronianus, whom he sent bound to Nu with Orders that he should be kept in safe Custo-

Hitherto he had behav'd himfelf with much Moderation and Humaniey: He had lately narrowly escap'd a Party sent out by Valent to entrap him? and with much Diligence fav'd himself and his Wife in a Ship prepar'd for the Purpose, against any finifer Accidents, or unexpected Accempts. But puffed up now with the glorious Progress of his Affairs, he began to grow proud and tyrannical, and not regarding the Vicifitude of Fortune, he commanded Arbetia's House, full of Moveables of an inestimable Value, to be risled. He had hitherto spaed it in confidence of Arbetio's Friendship, but when he found that upon repeated Messes he had pretended Sickness, and the Inconveniences of old Age, and for that reason declin'd waiting upon him he gave him this unfeasonable Proof of his Indignation. He could not but think this improvident Act would draw great Inconveniences upon him, however he pleas'd himself with the Thoughts of being ble to pass into the East at his Pleasure, where the Provinces grew weary of the present Government and were defirous of a Change; upon which Account he attempted to draw the Cities of Alie over o his Party, and liften'd diligently to those who propos'd to him the readiest Ways to raise Mony. whereby he might be the better able to raife Recruits upon occasion, and supply his Army.

The Year following, in which Gratian, the Son A. D. of Valentinian, and Dagalaiphus were Confuls, Va. 366.

Instrumental designations, march'd with a fitting Army to Pessions, a Town belonging to Galatia, which he reinforc'd, and proceeded into Lycia with a Design to surprize Goamonrius, who lay little extending him. Valens sound by Experience the adverse Party were much animated against him by

with

Fan-

·ft el

th

fe

to

H

to

pi

ha

m

he

ha

for

cop

for

a N

fto

wh

mu

lau

ver

the

WO

Pro

nian

luc

fons

Pov

is no

Em

and

cent

cedo

ty c

the

Fauftina, Confrancius his Widow, and her little D ter Constantina, who by Procopius his Order expos'd to the Army, the better to encourage to fight for fo tender a Branch of that Hi Stock, to which he himself pleaded a Re-Right. To obviate thefe Artifices, the Em prevail'd with Arbetio, who was now retir'd private Life. to come to him, hoping by the fence and Interest of one of Constantine's Constantine's Constantine's ders, the Soldiers Minds would be inollify'd was not deceiv'd in his Conjectures, for Arbent ing provok'd at Procepius his late Proceedings ag him, came as foon as fent for, and being reven by all for his Age and Dignity, he easily perh ed em to their Dury. He told em, Procopius no better than a Highway-man; but call a those had been seduced by him, his Sons and Fellow-S ers, who had formerly drawn their Swords with H nour, in Defence of the Empire, and Vindication the Legal Authority, the they were now missies a desperate Rebel, whom he advis a them to que and resign up to the Punishment his Usurpation deferv'd. This wrought to effectually, that of mourius, whom, with Agilo, Procopius had adv ced to the chiefest Command in the Army, furt der'd himself at Thyatira in Lydia, as did likew Agilo at Nacolia in Phrygia, whither the Empe was advanc'd to give the Rebels Battel. Here in of the Army follow'd the Example of their G ral, and went over to Valens; at which intexped Accident Procopins was fo amaz d. that he forto his Horse and fled into the adjoining Woods, ther he was attended by Florentins and Barchi a Tribune, who having been acquamted with ever fince the Days of Confidences, had follow di out of Necessity rather than good Will.d The having spent the greatest Part of the Night in ftracte firacted Thoughts and doubtful Apprehentions, will the Moon began to shine so bright upon con that they were in feat of a Discovery, and then they feiz'd on the dejected Procopies, and led him bound Procopius to the Emperor, who immediately commanded his taken, and beheaded. Head to be struck off, and Florences and Barchatbas to be put to Death, contrary (in Ammianus his Opinion) to the Rules of Justice and Reason. If they had betray'd a lawful Prince, Death had been no more than what their Treason had deserv'd; but if he was a Rebel and Usurper, they might reasonably have expected another fort of Reward for their feafonable Service. However this was the End of Procopius his Usurpation, who suffer'd Death in the fortieth Year and tenth Month of his Age. He was a Man of no mean Prefence, tho he went lomething flooping, with his Eyes ever fix'd on the Ground, which proceeded from his melancholy Temper, not much unlike Craffus, who is reported never to have laught but once in his Life. Yet was he always averse to the shedding of Blood, which, confidering the Morofeness of his Temper, is a thing to be wonder'd at, faith Ammianus, and was to sail sois.

Chap. I. XLV. Valentinin, Valens.

Marcellus, Governor of Nice, and Kinfmannto Procopius, hearing of his Death, commanded Secnianus in the dead of Night to be flain, in which he luckily provided for the Safety of a great many Perfons; for being an ill-natur'd cruel Managed of great Power with Valest, whose Countryman he was, sit is not unlikely but, had he out-liv'd the Defeat of Procopins his Party, he would have exasperated the Emperor, too much of himfelf inclined to Revenge, and procurd the Destruction of many as well innocent as guilty. After this Marcellas feiz'd on Ghaltedon, where being affifted by a few, whom Poverty or Despair had thrust into Rebellion, he assumed the Imperial Robe; but was thortly after furprized (ewi

H

GH

in d radid

do

nii

he

ri

Bea

hav

of S

Wa

had nap

tan

one

The

end

her

nun

en'

Wef

D

nans

been

n, b

nd r

he m ry,

rf d

n ob

aipha

ian 1

he R

nd pr

train

dving ime a

hare

fovin

ay v

by a Party of flout Soldiers fent for that pu who threw him into Prison, from whence he taken out the next Day, and, together with his complices, was tortur'd to Death. Tho' Seron his Death is thought to have abated fomething the Rigour in the Profecutions of the Rebels Valens his Valens proceeded with the utmost Severity ag those who really were, or who were but barely spected to have been in Propoplus his Interest. Ears lay open to all Complaints and Informati and the least Presumption made him use the tu ded Person with the greatest Barbarity; so that which appear'd like a Peace was more cruel, blo and inexorable than the most raging War: De Banishment, and Confiscation, were the ordina Methods of Proceeding, and no Man that hadd Misfortune to be accus'd was fo happy to escaped of those three Punishments, 'till the Emperor degrees grew weary of Blood, and he had fill'd h own Coffers and those of his Followers.

Severity.

Horrible Earthquakes.

During Procopins his Usurpation there happen fuch horrible Earthquakes throughout the Work the like of which are so far from being met wil in ancient History, that they exceeded the me extravagant Fables. About Break of Day, on 21st of July, a violent Storm of Thunder Lightning arose, which was attended with so dr ful a Motion of the Earth, that the Sea deferted i ancient Bounds, exposing Multitudes of its Inh tants that were feen sticking on the Mud, and Sun now, first since the Creation, beheld the na Bosom of the Deep, swelling up here into Mountains, and stretching forth there into continu Vallies; which whilft Swarms of People came contemplate, and to behold the Ships that und Sail were left as it were on dry Ground, the Sea o a sudden, disdaining a Repulse, return'd with n doubl doubl'd Fury, and bounding over its former Limits, broke with Trefiftible Rage over Islands into he Continent, where it bore down all before it, private Habitations, publick Buildings, Men and Beafts. No less than fifty thousand are said to have perish'd upon this Occasion, great Muleitudes of Ships were found stranded after the Recess of the Waters, and some by the Violence of the Winds had been born up on the Tops of Houses, as it appen'd at Alexandria, and some at two Miles diant from the Shore, as Ammianus faith he faw one himself near Methone, a Town in Laconia, These Prodigies he seems to relate as if they porended Procopius his Rebellion, tho' they ought raher to be confider'd as Introductions to that Fatal nundation of the Northern Nations, which hapen'd not long after, and the total Ruin of the Western Provinces, which follow'd thereupon,

During thefe Transactions in the Baft, the Ger- New Tronsans having recover'd their Strength, which had bles in the een fo much impair'd under the Conduct of Teli-, began again to give the Empire some Trouble, nd renew d their Incursions into Gand, piercing in he midst of Winter a great way up into the Counry, against whom Charietto and Severianus were all dispatched, who being overthrown and kill'd in n obstinate Engagement with the Enemy, Dagasiphus is made Choice of at Paris, where Valentiian then kept his Court, to restore the Honour of he Roman Arms; but he claying the Expedition, nd pretending he had not Strength fufficient to rerain the Barbarians, who in feveral Bodies were oving about the Country, and being fent for fome me after to receive the Confular Ornaments, and hare that Honour with Gratian, Valentinian's Son, ovinus. Mafter of the Horfe, was dispatch'd amy with convenient Forces in his room; he in-I3 forming unc

to

or

w

and

lef

Gd

PH

ner Fie

var DH

bu he

tha

tak

the

Was Co

mac

gov of :

this

and

who

him

con

Can

feng

his

Pro

2

the

Sch

dur the Tovinus Defeats the Germans.

forming himself of the Condition the Barb Army was in, and ordering his Marches with g Wariness and Circumspection, fell upon a great ty of the Epemy near a Place call'd Scarpour bout twelve Miles from Mets, and our em a before they were able to Arm and put theme upon their Guard, without lofing one Man of own fide; from hence he march'd his Army, mated with fol good Success, in quelt of and Party; and using the same Care as before, he inform'd by fome Scouts he had fent out for purpose, that he was not far from the Enemy, lay in a careless manner upon the Bank of the ver. As he drew near he refresh'd his Men in adjacent Vally, and then upon a Signal given, at broke violently into the Camp of the Barbari who had neither time to draw themselves into Body, or take to their Arms, or make the leaft! fiftance, but were all kill of bisterly curfing threatning the Romans, who were come thus pectedly upon em. This continu'd Success. which Fortune in Justice to his Virtue had on his Arms, encourag'd him to proceed against third Party, whom he found in the Caralina Plains, but in a better manner prepard to receive him. Here he entrench'd himfelfy and havin low'd his Men time for Sleep and Refreshment drew out his Army early in the Morning, hand dispos'd it, that it made an appearance of a Body, and feem'd to equal that of the Bnemy they far exceeded him in Numbers of Men, not in Courage and Discipline. Upon a Signated the Fight began, which continu dall the Day, the Romans had visibly the Advantage during whole Engagement, 'till Balchebaudes, al Tribune the Armatura, a great Boafter, but a downing Coward, ran away towards the Evening, and dangerd dangerd the loss of the whole Army, which began to be in a Confusion; will the General by his extraordinary Diligence encouraged the Soldiers afreitig who press'd wish fuch Resolution upon the Endo my, that they dill'd fix thoughd upon the Places and wounded four thousand, and that with the of of no more than two hundred on the Roman fide, and as many wounded. The Night having put an end to the Dispute, Jovinus appear d again next Morning at the Head of his Troops in the Rield, but found the Enemy had taken the Advantage of the Night and were fled, whom he purfu'd as far as he thought he might with Safety but finding they were too far gone to be overtaken he returned to the Camp, where he was informed that their King, who with a few others had been taken by fome whom Founds had lent to Plunder the Camp, was in his Ablence hang do at which he was to highly entaged, that he had punish'd the Commanding Officer with Death, had it not been made appear to him that it was done by the ungovernable Rage of the Soldiers, who in the Heat of the Service were not to be reftrain'd. After this compleae Victory he march'd back to Paris, and was met without the City by the Emperor, who in Respect to his Eminent Services design d him Conful for the enfuing Year. The Toy they conceived for to profeerous a Conclusion of the Campaign, was improv'd by the Arrival of Melfengers from Valens, who about the fame time fent his Brother Palentinian the Head of the Usurper Procopius warla narlw daid w

While the Empire was thus affaulted on all fides, The State the Church was no less distracted by Heresie and Church. Schilm; the Arians had received to small a Check during the thore Reign of Journ, who elpous d the Orthodox Interest, shar they still continu'd their

KX

Ye

110 fer

thr

hav

En

Sol

cm

for

mai

in

6 1

Sou

Pro

He

had affu

ceen

to th

tisf

the

gair

Day

Ma

the

buil

fide little

Am

ing !

who

that this furp

and

Artifices Oppressions and Gruelcies the tining was an utter Enemy to their abominable pinions, eyet defiring, if possible, to unite the of the People, he chose rather to connive and openly oppose ems but Valent, whose Wife D tia was an Arian, and who had been this W Baptiz'd by the Hands of Endoxines Bishop of frantinople, the Grand Patron of Arianism, decl himself openly for that Herefie comitting no portunities for its Encouragement and Support, doing all he could to drive those Pastors out of Church, who had the Courage to appole it, for the Arians govern'd as they pleas'd in the Spirit Affairs throughout the East; nor were they mi inferior in Power in the West, obtaining that force of Arms which they could not procure the Favour and Indulgence of the Emperor.

This Year Liberius, Bishop of Rome, dy'd, up which enfu'd a Scandalous Sedition in the City casion'd by the different Parties contending for Succession, in which the Partisans of Damasius, had been Elected by the Arians, disputed it warmly with the Catholicks, for whom they wer too ftrong, that Ammianus faid no less than one hu dred thirty feven Persons were found dead in a Church where they us'd to affemble to perform their Publi Worship; and that Juventius, Prafect of the City finding himself unable to quell the Tumult, was ford to retire into the Suburbs. He adds, "That tiss " wonder to fee those, who are ambitious of Hum " Greatness, contending with fo much Heat and An " mosity for that Dignity, which when they have a " tain'd they are fure of being enrich'd by the Oh " tions of the People, of appearing in great Splendor broad, conspicuous in their costly Coaches, for tuous in their Feasts, out-doing Soveraign Princes " the Expences of the Table. For which Reason Pretextains uniains, a Heathen, who was Practed of the City the Year following, was in the right when he faid, Make me Bi hop of Rome, and Pll be a Christian too. While the Roman Arms were bufied, as we obfery'd before, in the West, Thrace began to be Commetithreaten'd with new Commotions; for the Goths ons in having affifted Procepins in his Defigns upon the Empire, and Supply'd him with a good Number of Soldiers, Valent thought he had just reason to call em to an Account for fo bold an Affront; and therefore first fent Victor, Mafter of the Horse, to demand of em suby they who were at Peace, and in League with the Romans, prefum'd to join with a Rebel, who had rais'd War against his lawful Soveraign. They alledg'd in Excuse, and produc'd Procepius his Letters, wherein he affirm'd himself the Heir of Confrancine's Family, and upon that Grounds had a Right to the Imperial Title, which he had assum'd; This, they faid, ought to excuse their Proceedings, which were influenc'd by what appear'd to them just and equitable. Valens, in no manner fatisfy'd with this frivolous Answer, march'd towards the latter end of the Spring with a good Army against them, and having mustered his Men near Daphne, a Fort built by Constantine the Great in Masia Secunda, the better to restrain the Inroads of the Goths, he pass'd 'em over the Ister by Bridges built for that purpole, and got fafe on the other fide without the least Resistance, where he found little to do; for upon the Approach of the Reman Army the Goths were all fled into the Neighbouring Mountains of Serri, inaccessible to any but those who were well acquainted with the Country. But that he might be faid to have done fomething in this Summer's Expedition, he fent out Arinthens to surprize some who were wandering o'er the Plains, and had not yet reach'd their Companions, and fo without

Prie

atus

without receiving any harm, or doing mildly he return de The Year following he prepare the fame Application for a fecond Invalide Ropp'd in his Expedition by the immodel verflowings of the Dambel and forc'd to near a Village call'd Carponus, till Winter on he remov'd to Marcianopolis, where he com the rest of the Year. The next Summer h new'd his Delign, and having laid a Bridge of over the River at Novidunam, he piered far the Country, and fell upon the Grachange is Warlike Nation, and after feveral Encounters Achanaric, their Chief Commander, and Soldier, to fly; after which Explores he ree again to Winter in Marcianopolis, where fome O tures were made of a Peace, which both feem'd inclinable to hilten to. By reafon of Prince's Ablence the East was exposid to Danger, and the Barbarians, who us'd to drive great Trade with the Subjects of the Empire gan to be in great Diffres from so long and ruption, fo that they fent their Ambaffadors ful ently instructed to offer their Proposals for a P And the Emperor, who as yet had a regard to flice, and fludy'd the Welfare of his Subjects. he was afterwards missled by his gross Place and overwhelm'd the Empire in unipeakable fortunes, gave Ear to the Ambassadors, so that immediately fent away Victor and Arinthania finding the Goths to be in good earnest, agreed on the Preliminaries, and the Place of Treaty. thanaric affirm'd his Father had made him Iw folemnly never to tread on Roman Groundy because it was below the Majesty of the Es to go to him, they met by confent in Bounia

Peace with middle of the River, where the Peace was ratify'd the Goths. their mutual Satisfaction, and Hostages delivered both

CI

bot

timo

of T

by mag

in t

loc

and

his

the war

redi kill

cipa

VINA

Am

the

mad

rien

a ga fully time

doni

Atti

and

emb

OF A

join'

Loni

Ware

quit

lay

whi

COVE

Chap. J. / XLV. Valencinian, Valens.

both fides; after which Palers returned to Co. timples whicher dibannic likewife fled in the Reign of Theadofies, being driven our of his own Country: by a Faction rais d against him, and was there very

All this while the Germans feeth'd to bevery quiet in the Welt, fo that Palentinian was at leifure to look after the Affairs of Britain, where the Piels The Affairs and Stores committed great Ourrages, but were by of Britain. his extraordinary Case and Management reprefs d for the preferres but as he was returning from deviens towards Triers, the Year following, he was informed A.D. that the Barbarians were again up in Arms, and had: 367. reduced this Island to a miferable Condition, having kill'd Willerides, and eircumvented another Principal Commander of the Romans; whereupon 70-Army in Britain, but receiving fill worfe Newsof the State of Affairs in this Island, the Emperor made Choice of Theodofins, a Man of great Expe Theodofiriende and exemplary Courage, who at the Head of us fent this a gallane Army, both of Horfe and Foot, chear ther. fully undertook the Service. The Piets at that time were divided into two Nations, the Descalidonit and Vellurioness besides whom there were the Anadomi and the Score; who roved up and down, and committed a great deal of Milchief Theodofins embark'd at Bulloigns and landed fafely at Rumpie, or Richberough in Kent, where, as foon as he was join'd by his whole Army, he march'd directly to London, call d Londonium by Ammianus, but afterwards Appella, accounted a City of great Antiquity in his Days; and dividing his Porces into feveral Parties, fell upon the Rovers whilst they lay scatter d up and down loaden with their Booty. which together with their Captives he quickly recover'd out of their Hands, restoring all to the right

Proprietors, except a finall Portion which he buted among his weary Soldiers & After this ! turn'd in a triumphant manner to the City press'd before with great Difficulties, but by means restor'd to its ancient Freedom. Here in the fecret Satisfaction of his prefent Success. an Uncertainty of the future, he lay confide what further Course he was best to take, he inform'd by the Prisoners and Deferters, that Enemies confifted of many Nations fierce and tractable, not to be mafter'd but by Stratagems a fudden Onfets. First therefore upon Promise of general Pardon he encourag'd those, who had for faken their Colours, to return; and still intent to the better Management of the Affairs in the Ill he fent for Civilis to govern Britain as Vice-P fect under him, joining Dulcilius in Committe with him. Here he continu'd 'till the Year too

nagement.

His pru-during which time he acted the Part of a hard dent Ma- couragious Soldier, as well as an experienc'd vigilant Captain. By his great Care and excell Management he laid the Foundations of Peace a Security, which continu'd for a long time after restoring both the Cities and Garrisons, into whi great Disorders had crept, to as good a Condition as they had formerly been in. After he had no cover'd a Province the Enemy had over-run, fortify'd the Borders, and fettled all things that were amis in the Island; he was with much Commen dation recall'd to Court, and left his Charge with no less Honour, than formerly had waited on the Industry and Fortunes of Furius Camillus, or Pa pirius Cursor. Tho' these Exploits were the Work of feveral Years, I thought fit to touch upon len once for all, that I might with less Interruption attend fuch Transactions as more immediately relate to the Empire. 14/370

But

C

at 4 Life

lian W25

his.

othe

inde

spec

time end

who

ing,

vest

par c

he l

a gr

on I

ded

The

very

Reig

ges, pero

proc

mon

disco

had.

Indu

had

burn

jecte

fever

tectio

great

at M

T

Chapit XLV. Valentin, Valens, Gratian.

But to return to Valencinian, who whilft he lay Valentiniat Amiens fell dangeroully ill, infomuch that his anfalls fich. Life was despair d of : Wherenpon Reficus Julianus, a Man of a most equel and implecable Nature, was at a private Meeting propos'd by fome Gauls for his Successors but was for good Reasons oppos'd by others, who were more inclinable to Severus, a Man indeed of an austere furly Temper, but in all Respects to be preferr'd before him. In the mean time the Emperor's unexpected Recovery put an end to the Hopes and Contentions of both Parties; who perhaps not ignorant of what had been transacting, resolv'd to prevent any further Disputes, and vest his Son Gratian with the Purple. Having prepar'd the Minds of the Soldiers to ratifie his Choice, he led Gracian into the Camp, where attended by a great Concourse of the Nobility, he plac'd his Son on his right Hand, and in a fet Speech recommended him to the Army for their future Emperor. The Sight of the Emperor, the Joy for his Reco- and upon very, the Presence of the Young Prince, under whose bis Recove-Reign they promis'd themselves mighty Advanta- " makes ges, easily persuaded em to concur with the Em-Gratian peror in his Request; whereupon they receiv'd and Augustus. proclaim'd Gratian Emperor, giving all possible Demonstrations of their Joy and Satisfaction.

This great Work being over, the Emperor soon discover'd the Cruelty of his Nature, which he had hitherto for private Ends with great Care and Industry conceal'd ... He commanded Diocles, who had been Gomes Largitionum in Illyricum, to be burnt alive upon very inconsiderable Crimes objected against him; as he did likewife Diodorus and feveral others, and that only for flying to the Protection of the Law, against the Oppressions of a great Man in favour. These Executions were done at Milain, where the Christians solemniz'd the Memory

mory of those who suffer d, calling the Place they were bury'd The Innocents. His Pury ed it fell to the Corporations, many in wh had put to death, had he not been reftrain'd feasonable Interposition of Emphraxims the Qui and Florentius the Præfect. If any one deching Jurisdiction of a Judge, whose Malice he h Ion to think would make him partial in his C and from whom upon fuch an Account he mig Equity appeal, he certainly remitted the Cau the fame Judge, notwithstanding all the Except the Appealant could make: And if any Man found to owe the Publick more than it appear was able to pay, Valentinian, according to the verity of an old Law, which the Gentleness of a er Administrations had long fince abrogated, adjudg him to die.

Great Troubles in Africk:

We observ'd before how much Britain was afflicted by the Scots and Piets, at the same time Africa groan'd under the Rage and Cruelty of the Ball rians, having hardly been at ease ever fince the Be ginning of this Emperor's Reign, which may we be imputed to the great want of Discipline in the Army. One Romanus had been fent to govern in those Parts, a Man of so covetous and infatiables Temper, that he exceeded the very Barbarians in oppressing and pillaging the Provinces; but still too care to have a Friend at Court, who blinded the En peror with a plaufible Representation of Romanash Conduct, and kept him in Ignorance of the miles ble Condition the Country was in. The Afteria a barbarous Nation, had for a long time harrest the Province by their frequent Inroads, but eit upon Compulsion or through Fear had fate still for some time in Jovian's Reign, 'till a little before his Death they renew'd their Hostilities, and grew mor outragious than ever, and that upon this Occasion One chie with greather drefs Matt ons f

CI

On

mai

and

of t

con

Bar

laid

not well

Day

kill off,

ple, tions ed N to fo have too

give their

he fe man Hou to d

himf and I the I

Frien

Chap I. XLV Walering Valeris, Gratian. 127

One Stuchao their Countyman had been guilty of many aboutingble Practices within the Roman Pale, and had proceeded to far as to attempt the betraying of the Province, upon which he was apprehended, convicted, and burnt alives. This to energy the Barbarians, that like wild Beafts they broke out and hid all the Country walte before 'em. They had not the Confidence to attempt Lepen, a flrong City, well fortify'd and inhabited, but continu d'for three Days together in the fruitful Country about it. kill'd all they thet, burnt what they could not bear off, and took Silva Prifoner, who was one of the chief Men of the Town, and happen'd to be then with his Pamily in the Country. The Leptines had great Realon to be concerned at this Affront, and therefore apply'd themselves to Romanus for Redrefs; but he refus'd to concern himself in the Matter, unless they would make very large Provisions for him, and furnish him with no less than 2000 Camels for his Expedition. There Demands were too high and exorbitant to be comply'd with by People, who had been exhaufted by fo many Depredations; fo that after he had amuz'd 'em with a pretended Negotiation for forty Days together, he left em to follow other Meafures. They feeing they could have no Protection from him, disparch'd away Severus and Placcianus to Valentinian, who were to give him a true Account of the miferable State of their Affairs. Of this when Romanus was inform'd he fent a Messenger away Post to Remigius, his Kinsman and Confident, who was great Steward of the Houshold, defiring him to perfuade the Emperor to defer the Buliness to the Vicar of Africk and himself. When the Messengers were arrived at Court, and had preferred their Petition, offering to prove the Particulars contained in it, Remigius manag dhis Friend's Caufe with fo much Cunning, that the Emperor

n i

ble a

is in

En

shi fer

ian,

tasi ithor I for

ehi

mar

One

peror was at a loss which to believe; and so a Matter slept for the present, as is usual in Cour where there is a hurry of Business.

Whilft the Reople of Tripolis waited in expe on of their defir'd Relief, the Barbarians encou by these finister Practices came down in greater N bers, and wasted all the Territories of Leptis, Oca, a Town fituated between that and Sel from which three Cities the Province of Trip faid to have its Name. They kill'd feveral Office and an infinite number of inferior Rank; Rome to whom the Charge of the Militia was lately to ferr'd, fitting all this while idle and unconcer The Noise of these Devastations at last reached the Emperor's Ears in Gaul, at which he was fo con cern'd, that he immediately fent away Palladiss wit Mony to pay the Army their Arrears, and Orde to bring him a true Information of the State of the Province. In the mean time the Afturiani, encou rag'd by these Delays, continu'd their Incursio raging like ravenous Wolves, whom the Tatte of Human Blood had made more thirsty and implace Mychon, a fubstantial Citizen, and a Man of great Interest, was surprized near the Town, and endeavouring to make his Escape he fell into empty Pit, breaking one of his Ribs in the Falls from whence he was taken up by the Barbarians led to the Gates, where he was ranfom'd by his Wi and drawn up by a Cord to the Top of the W but dy'd of his Wound two Days after. This P vilege of doing what they pleas'd, made the Bar rians more infolent and prefuming: They attac Leptis, it felf, and continu'd before the Walls for eight Days together; but finding the Inhabitants refol to defend the Town, and having some of their of Men wounded, they return'd fomething discourt The Leptines all this while hearing no News of the forma for Car

for percondition Dilition Flactor of h his and taker with he madius brou confe

cenar

at Le

mes, mal (was co

ans havey'd Roma
count

was r wok'd nagem

too, a tad di est sha

vate L hat h

Chap. I. XL Vo Valentine Walers, Gratian: 129

former Messengers, and reduc'd to the last Extramities, sent Jovinus and Pancratius with fresh Interactions to the Emperor, whom they were to inform of what they had both seen and suffer'd. At Carthage these Musicipers met with Severus and Flaccianus, from whom they understood the Emperor's Will, but however proceeded with great Diligence to Court. Severus dy'd at Cambage, hun Flaccianus return'd to give the Leptines an Account of his Embassie.

By this time Romanus was inform'd of Pallading his Approache and the Substance of his Commissions and therefore confider'd what Methods were to be taken for his own Security. He dealt under-hand with the Principal Officers of the Army, with whom he maintain'd a good Intelligence, to prefent Palla dins with the greatest Share of the Mony he had brought to pay their Arrears, which they readily consented to; and Palladius, being of a mean mercenary Temper, as readily accepted. Being arriv'd at Leptis, he received from Eretthins and Aristomes nes, two of the chief Men in the Town; the difmal Complaints of the Inhabitants, by whom he was conducted to view the lamentable Condition of the Country, and the miserable Havock the Barbarians had made. Which when he had diligently furvey'd he return'd with bitter Exclamations against Romanus, threatning to give the Emperor a full Account of the Condition to which he faw the Province was reduc'd by his Means. But Romanus, prowok'd at his Reproof, and conscious of his Misma ragement, told Palladius he would turn Informer 00, and let the Emperor know how faithfully he ad discharged his Trust, having perverted the greatthe share of the Soldiers Donative to his own prirate Use; which put Palladius into fuch a Fright, hat he agreed with Romanns to conceal all from the rai

Q

fac

Sic

flo

W

W

fafe

the

Qu

mal

pati

and ally

fror

on,

entr

clue

Nig

the

that

The

havi

the

the .

conf

gers

Nig

thof

fell

tew this.

espec

Saces

obtai Terr

der,

the Emperor; and accordingly affured blin at Return, that the Provincials complain'd without Reason: And being fent back a fecond time Africk, he and Ramanus tamper'd fo cunningly the Leptines, that they deny'd they had given & nus any Commission to say what he did to the Emperor; who thereupon order'd Eredbins and zistomenes to have their Tongues cut out, and vinus to be put to Death, and proceeded with the like Severity against all the rest, who had been in dustrious in exposing the Villany of Romanus. To vinus was executed at Vica, but Erecthins and An fromenes made their Escape, and lay conceal'd til after the Death of Valentinian; when the whole Intrigue was discovered, and the Completters fulfer'd as they deferv'd.

of Perfia begins new Troubles.

The King As these Commotions in Africk feem'd an in stance of the Declension of the Empire, do did in por, the old King of Perfia, by his Practices in the East, bid open Defiance to it. He had, fince the infamous Peace made with Jovian, been frequently tampering with the Nobility of Armenia, trying in fair Promifes to allure them over to his Party. to force the ordinary fort by Menaces: But bein now no longer able to conceal his Designs, he oper ly invaded it; and having by abominable Treacher got Arfaces, King of the Country, into his Had he first put out his Eyes, and then murder'd his a Caftle call'd Agabana: Then driving out Son maces, whom the Romans had fet over Iberia, her folently put one Aspacuras in his Place, and in De fiance of the Roman Authority honour'd him with a Diadem. Encourag'd by this Success in this An bitrary Proceedings, he committed Armenia to the Care of Cylaces the Eunuch, and Artabanes, two Fu gitives whom he had long entertain'd in his Court and at the fame time gave 'em Orders to take m nie Arregerafia, a very firong Town, in which the Oucen by with her Son, and the Treasure of Arfacts. They, as they had been commanded, laid Siege to the Place; but foralwach as the Town flood very advantageoutly, and the Severity of the Winter hinder'd the Beliegers from advancing their Works, Cylaces and Arrabases upon Promise of a fale Conduct were admitted into the Place, where they endeavour'd in high Terms to perfunde the Queen to furrender, and by a speedy Compliance make the King of Perse her Friend. She in a very pathetical manner bewail'd her Husband's Death; and her own Misfortunes, and wrought for effectually with her Tears upon those two Captains, that from Enemies they began first to pity her Condition, and then to embrace her Interest; upon which entring into a more fecret Confultation, it was concluded that the Belieg'd should, at a set Hour in the Night, fally out with an unexpected Force upon the Enemy, and attack em in their Trenches, and that Cylaces and Arrahames should favour the Attempt. These Things being agreed upon, and both Sides having folemnly fworn to the Performance of 'em, the two Commanders return'd to the Camp, telling the Persians the Befreg'd had defir'd two Days to confider of their Proposals. This threw the Befregers into a stepid Security, fo that in the dead of Night, whilst the Guards themselves were asleep, those from the City came suddenly upon 'em, and fell on 'em with fo much Fury, that they fuffer'd few or none to escape. Sapor was so exasperated at this Accident, that he breath'd nothing but Revenge; especially when he found that Para, the Son of Ansaces, whom the Queen, after the late Advantage obtain'd over the Persians, had sent into the Roman Territories, was kindly received by Valens his Order, and appointed to refide at Nercesares. This GeneGenerosity of the Emperor towards Arsaces his See encourag'd Cyclaces and Artabanes to desire his Assace against Sapor, and that he would send young Para to be their King. For some time the Emperor deny'd their Request, but at length commanded Terentius, his Governor in those Parts, to conduct Para into Armenia, where he suffer'd him to command, but without any of the Ensigns of Royal Authority; proceeding thus cautiously, lest Sam, who was already highly provok'd, should have just Cause to object to the Romans the Breach of the Peace.

Sapor, when he was inform'd of what Valens had done was enraged to the highest Degree, and fell violently upon Armenia, which he ravaged, and laid all waste before him, whilst Para, seeing no possibility of Relief, fled with Cylaces and Artaba nes into the strong Holds of the Mountains, which lay between the Roman Borders and Lazica, where they lay lurking five Months together, in spight of all the Means made use of by Sapor to take 'em: Who feeing it to no purpose to hunt any longer after 'en, burnt all the Forts and Castles he had taken either by Fraud or Force, and fate down with a numerous Army before Artogerassa, which after several Sallies and Attacks he took and destroy'd, carrying away the Wife and Treasure of Arsaces. These Proceed. ings feem'd to give the Romans a just Occasion to begin the War, and therefore Arintheus was fent with a good Army to affift the Armenians upon all Oc casions; which Sapor no sooner understood, but he berook himself to his usual Artifices, in which he feldom miscarry'd. By private Messengers he protfer'd Para his Friendship and Assistance, and seems to blame the Baseness of his Spirit, that could suffer himself to be cheated with the shadow of Ar thority, whilft Cylaces and Artabanes affum dall the Power

n'd beria; makin

and about hout h

Pos

ver

im

tha

him

VOIC

Ari

fo t

requ

acco

700 fron

from

with

to h

of S

Arm

migh

neith

Roma

in th

quair

the 1

coulc

affign

Lazi

borde

ment

that t

had r witho

Power, and were in Effect no other than his Governors; by these cunning Infinuations he so far impos'd upon the Ignorance of the Young Prince that he kill'd 'em both, and fent their Heads to Sapor, to let him know how tractable he should find him for the future. By this means he had unavoidably got all Armenia into his Hands, had not Arintheus by his timely Approach prevented him; so that finding himself likely to be over-power'd he requir'd by his Ambassadors to the Emperor, that, according to the Articles of Peace between him and Jovian, the Armenians might receive no Allistance from the Romans. This the Emperor was fo far from condescending to, that he order'd Terentins with twelve Legions to restore Sauromaces by force to his Principality of Iberia; but Aspaguras desir'd of Sauromaces, as he drew near with the Roman Army to the River Cyrus, that being Kinsmenthey might govern conjointly, alledging that he could neither give up the Country, or take part with the Romans, because his Son was detain'd as an Hostage in the Persian Court. The Emperor being acquainted with these Proposals, and willing to settle the Affairs of Iberia in as peaceable a manner as he could, confented to a Partition of the Country, alligning that part which lay next to Armenia and Lazica to Sauromaces, and to Aspacuras the Residue bordering upon Albania and Perfia. This Agreement highly incens'd Saper, who loudly complain'd that the Romans, contrary to the Treaty of Peace, had reliev'd Armenia, despis'd his Embassie, and without his Knowledge or Consent had divided Iberia; for which Indignities he vow'd to be reveng'd, making all Preparations accordingly both at home and abroad to undo what had been concerted without his Concurrence. These things happen'd in the Years 368 and 369, in the last of which Va-K 3 lentinian,

1 自己全省书

fell and no the tich nere fall

7 bo

em,

her

ous

lies

way ed-

vith Och he he rof-

(af-

A. D. 369.

th

sh

w

Lo

to

gy

cep

he his

Fhi

gan

He

mie

Em

of t

to !

ther

tack

that

man

tion

Mo

Gern

a de

by 1

der,

felf

into

nour

great

brave

lent

retur

tentinian, the Son of Valens, and Aur. Villor, 'Valentinian's Exploits in Germany.

Royal Birth, feiz'd fuddenly upon the City Ments, a Defign he had been long contriving. could the easier execute by reason there was Garrison in it; and it happening to be upon folemn Festival, the Inhabitants, who were all C stians, were busie at their Devotion, and there little able to defend themselves; after he had in himself Master of the Place he plunder'd it; went off with a great Booty, and a great many R foners of both Sexes. Not long after, as if Port defired to make the Romans fome amends, VI cabins, a Prince of that Nation, was murder'd one of his own Servants, at the Inftigation of Roman Emissaries. He was an active, vie Prince, the he outwardly appear'd weak and intim and had been both by his Arms and in his Coun cils a great Enemy to the Romans, whose oper Attempts against him he had often evaded, therefore they had no other means left to remove him but by Treachery. The Traitor, as foon a the Fact was committed, fled his Country to avoid the Punishment he too justly deserv'd, and wa kindly receiv'd by the Romans. Valentinian could not but think the Germans would revenge to foul a Treason with all the Acts of Hostility imaginable and therefore made more than ordinary Preparate to prevent them. He rais'd a very powerful Arm supply'd it with all manner of Provisions, and as los as the Time of the Year would permit pass'd Rhine without any Resistance, taking his Son Gra rian along with him. After a long March of few ral Days into the Country, without meeting any Enemy to oppose 'em, they came to a Place call' Solicinium, where he was inform'd by his Spies that the Enemy were near at hand, who finding it impossible to avoid coming to an Engagement, posses d themselves of a very advantageous Piece of Ground, which they resolved to defend against the Roman Legions, and out of which the Emperor refolv'd to remove and The Place was a high and Icraggy Mountain, almost inaccessible on every Side, except that which look d rowards the North; thither he fent Sebastianus, with part of the Porces under his Command, to intercept the Germans in their Flight, if he should have the good Fortune to gain the better of 'em from any other Quatter's He himself went attended with some in whom he could best confide, to see on what other part he might most commodiously attempt em, in which Enterprize he very narrowly efcap'd an Ambufcade of the Enemy, and with much Difficulty got fafe to his own Men; who after they had refreshed themselves prepard for the Engagement, and attack'd she Enemy with fo true a Roman Courage, that notwithstanding all the Opposition the Germans could make, who fought with more Refolution than Conduct, they gain'd the Top of the Mountain, and farrounded them. However the Germans maintain'd the Fight for a long time with a desperate Bravery, 'till at length over-power'd by fresh Supplies they were first put into Diforden, and after that to Flight, in which more Men fell than in the Battel; those few that escap'd fled into the Woods, leaving to the Romans the Honour of the Field, and the Advantage of a very great Victory, purchas'd at the Expence of a few common Soldiers, and the Loss of two or three brave Commanders. After this the Soldiers were fent into Winter-Quarters, and the two Emperors return'd to Triers.

the

Great Cruelsies exercis'd at Rome.

About this time there were extraordinary rages committed in Rome by the means of one it minus, who from an obscure Beginning role Principal Command in the Oity . He was o cruel inexorable Temper, and being a Man of Interest with Valentinian, who was almost as as himself, he rag'd without Distinction again Ages and Conditions, varnishing over his barba Proceedings with the specious Colour of Jun Never did Tyrant with more Implacableness as a People he was fent to Govern, or more pot oully pervert the Laws to the Ruin of those t were delign'd to Protect. From being Intendant the publick Corn, he at length, by his Impude and Flattery, arriv'd at the Dignity of Profe Pratorio it felf, bearing himself with equal I lence, Pride and Corruption in all his Offices, to at last, under Gratian, he suffer'd Death by Hands of the Common Hangman, together with feveral of his Instruments and Accomplices.

Valens his . About the fame time Valens rag'd with equal to Tyrannical ry in the East, to which an appearance of Dang Proceedings and the evil Practices of some of his own Servan in the East. had justly provok'd him. Anatolius and Spudasias two Persons employ'd in the Revenue, were accused of having attempted the Life of Fortunatianus, who had the principal Management of the Empe private Estate, and who, being a troublesome inqui fitive Man, was calling them to a very fevere Ac count for Matters relating to their Office. The Matter was brought before Modestas the Prafett Pratorio, and one Palladius and Heliodores were pu to the Rack. Palladius, unable to endure the Torture, cry'd out, That these were slight inconsiderable Matters, compar'd to others in Agitation, which were of that Consequence, as to bring all things in to Confusion, without a timely Prevention; being urg'd Fidu Irena dice was: was: priz' to d with skill'd Mati Princ (elves Curio Celves concla great reign decei descei Gaul all M

Ch

urg'

Hum Fortu he the confe that I ons by Learn comm

him

media inform to the Mu'd fantin or th

urg'd to a Discovery of what he meant, he accus'd Fidustius, who had formerly been President, and Irenaus, and Pergamius, of learning, by fecret Pradices and forbidden Arts, the Name of him who was to succeed Valens in the Empire. Fidustius was by change then prefent, and was too much furpriz'd at so peremptory and unexpected a Charge to deny the Fact. He confess'd that he, together with one Hilarius and Patritius, two Persons well skill'd in the Art of Divination, enquir'd into that Matter, and found, upon trial, that an excellent Prince was to succeed Valens, but that they themsolves should come to untimely Ends for their fatal Curiosity; that examining farther between themselves, who was most likely to be the Man, they concluded it could be no Body but Theodorus, whose great Accomplishments made him worthy e Sovereign Command. And indeed they were not much deceiv'd in their Conjecture, for Theodorus was descended of an Ancient and Noble Family in Gaul, the a Sicilian by Birth, and acceptable to all Men of all Conditions, who highly efteem'd him for his Modesty, Prudence, Learning and Humanity, Virtues that deferv'd a more exalted Fortune than that to which he was arriv'd, tho he then had great Preferments at Court. Fidustius confess'd farther, being almost tortur'd to Death, that he had informed Theodorus of these Predictions by the Intervention of Enferins, a Man of great Learning and eminent Quality, having formerly commanded as Vicar in Afia. Enferius was imnediately committed to Prison, and the Emperor nform'd of all that had pass'd, which enrag'd him to the highest degree. Orders were immediately fu'd out for the apprehending Theodorus at Comfantinople, as were likewise several others, eminent or their Birth and Employments, seiz'd in more remote

ho

101

ch

ng d

remote Parts of the Empire, and brought Custody. The Publick Prisons could not those that were apprehended, nor were Dwellings fufficient for the Reception of Multitudes of People, abundance of whom committed upon bare Sufpicion. For Vale naturally of a jealous, distrustful Temper, his Flatterers that were constantly about his bour'd to improve, and fome late Practices his Life had abundantly exasperated, which h ver can in no measure excuse the unexampled & gour of his Inquititions; he proceeded with Severity against the Innocent and the Guilty, frequently refolv'd upon the Punishment before was acquainted with the Crime, fo that a great my were commanded to prepare for Death, they knew they were in the least suspected was too Proud and Imperious to Submit him the Coolness of a sober Enquiry, too Covetous fuffer any to escape who had been once accurd and too much abus'd by his Parafites to give He in the Course of his Proceedings to the Advice of Men of Honour and Conscience: In a Word, was grown to feverely terrible, that one Solia, who had a little before been Intendant of the Treasury in Thrace, fell down dead at the Officer's Feet the Morning he was to be examin'd, under an Apprehension of the great Torture he was that Day to

The first that was brought upon the Stage was Pergamins, who being a Man full of Words, in very large Discourse accus'd some thousands as Acceffary, many of whom were then living in the remotest Parts of the Empire; but whereas the Judge were before at a loss in what Method to proceed, his indigested Allegations made it more confud and intricate, and fo he was put to Death, After

fevera

le

D

0 tr

m

II

Pr

W

W

bit

N

fer

Tb

10

the ref

CIO

DiH.

tho

the

Was

the

the

diff

wh

ror,

all t 1CC

Har

Am

lofo

fess

prea

CONC

wer

Liv

Chap.I. XLV. Valentin. Valens. Gratian. 139

feveral had been examin'd, who vary'd in some Particulars, but agreed in the main, Theodoras was commanded to speak, who is first made use of Inintercede with the Emperor in his Behalf; bue being compelled to speak more to the Purpose, he dedar'd that he once intended to discover the whole Practice to Valens, but was prevented by Enferins, who perfuaded him that what had been foretold was not to be the Effect of any predominant, ambitious Patrion, but to proceed from the absolute Necessity of Fate; the same was confessed by Exferius upon the Rack, and fome Letters written by Theodorus to Hilarius were produc'd against him. in which Letters he profess'd he did not doubt of the Truth of the Presiction, but waited for a convenient Opportunity to put the Delign in Execution. After this they were remov'd, and Europins, who then govern'd After as Proconful, and is thought to be the Author of the Abridgement of the Reman History, which he Dedicated to Valens, was produced as privy to the Crime, but when all their Endeavours and Tortures to make Papphithus the Philosopher accuse him were ineffectual, he was dismis'd. The Examination being over, and the whole Discovery made and reported to the Empetor, he with one general Sentence commanded 'em all to be put to Death, which Sentence was executed accordingly without Mercy or Distinction, till the Hangmen were quite weary of their Employment, Among those that suffer'd was Maximus the Philosopher, and famous Master of Julian. He confess'd he had been informed of what the Oracle had predicted, but out of Respect to his Profession had conceal'd it, the be bad foretold that they, who were concern'd in the Confultation, would lofe their Lives. He was Beheaded at Epbefas, the Place of

pre-

WD in a

Ac-

re-

dges

eed,

beur

fter

zera

his Nativity, by Festus Proconful of Asia, The ther by Valens for that purpose, the he then be of an incurable Distemper, which in a few I would have ended his Life without the Interon of the Hangman's Ax. In this publick Me fell likewise Diogenes, a great Lawyer, who long before had been Governor in Bithynia, was guilty of no other Crime but the Possession a large Estate. He was a Man of noble Birth. excellent Wit, and profound Eloquence, and fel univerfally lamented for his Candor, Magnificence and Integrity.

These violent Proceedings, which seem'd to enceed the rigour of former Profcriptions, were hi ly distastful to the People, for which realon Emperor caus'd an infinite number of Books burnt, as if they contain'd dangerous Docu and treated of forbidden Arts, thinking thereby allay his Subjects Displeasure, whereas they treated of nothing but what related either to the Libera Sciences of the Civil Law. In the mean time the Provinces were fill'd with general Lamentation the Fury of the Inquisition sweeping away who Families at once; for the Husband was no fooner dead, and the House by Publick Order seiz'd, but the Officers, appointed to examine the Goods, privately convey'd among the Writings some pretended Charm or ridiculous Enchantment, which being expos'd in Court their Wives and Children were all feiz'd by Order of the Judges, who had no regard to Law, Religion or Conscience; and after all their Limbs were broken upon the Rack, they were, both young and old, without any Defence made, convey'd forth in Chairs to be Executed. Hereupon so great a Terror seiz'd upon all sorts of Persons, that they burnt their Libraries, renounc'd their Learning, and chose rather to be reputed ignorant and t foph Matt first, Valer fpatc! put a gan ' dosius recei

Succe W

vage Fault the B dilige barou of the had n trary that c his A ginabl from new ? NH

Power hind I vately ginnin Zamn

we had and fo Rever

very c m's C

and

Chap. I. XLV. Valentin. Valens, Gratian. 141

and unskilful, than make the least Profession of Philo-fophy at fo certain a Hazard of their Lives.

This is the Account Ammianus gives us of this Matter; others fay, the Oracle foretold that the first Part of the Person's Name who was to succeed Valens was Theod, for which reason he not only dispatch'd Theodorus, but to make void the Prediction put a great many more to Death, whose Names began with those Syllables, such as Theodulus, Theodofins, and the like, without ever reflecting on that receiv'd Maxim, That never any Prince can put his Successor to death.

Whilst Valens was raging thus with more than Savage Fury at Antioch, Valentinian, whose greatest Fault was his Cruelty, was carefully concern'd for the Borders of the Empire in the West, which he diligently fecur'd against the Incursions of the Barbarous Nations; and had feiz'd on Macrianus a King of the Germans, a resolute and troublesome Prince, had not the Intemperance of his Soldiers, who conrary to his express Orders burnt and destroy'd all that came in their way, given the King Notice of his Approach, which he took all the Measures imaginable to conceal. He was scarce return'd to Triers from this Expedition, before be was inform'd of new Troubles in Africk.

eral

the one but pri-

d to neir oth

On-

pon ons,

rant

and

Nubel, a petty Prince, but a Man of the greatest Power in Mauritania, dying, deft several Sons behind him; one of which, call'd Zamma, being privately made away by his Brother Firmus, gavea Beginning to a War, which enfu'd thereupon; For Zamma was a Man for whom Romanus, of whom we had occasion to speak before, had a great Esteem, and for whose Death he was resolved to have a full Revenge. To which purpose he had the Matter very carneftly follicited by his Friends in Valentine m's Court, and Remigins so manag'd it in his Behalf.

half, that Firmur was not allow'd by his A offer any thing in his own Defence; which the Moor afraid of being condemn'd unheard for fear of a Surprize, put him upon his De The Moors he therefore Revolted from the Romans, and ming the Title of King fet up for himfelf.

the

pur

affi

but

othe

he !

pru

pro

for

he 1 ed t

Hav

em, of t

bn/n

ac r beca

and

cour

of F

roun

white

he f

Cou

en'd

hop

cede

ceiv,

that

difm

which

Vilit

make

leap'

of th

revolt in Africk.

Theodofigainst 'em.

This News was no fooner brought to Court, Theodofius was fent immediately away to reduce hi us fent a- if possible, before he had time to strengthen himse too much. Zazimus faith, not only Firmus and Adherents revolted, but the Moors in general, vok'd to it by Romanus his Tyranny, who had a miserably harras'd and impoverish'd 'em; so that the Emperor had great Reason to be diligent in a matter which might turn to fo ill a Confequences and there was great need of fo expert a Commander a Theodosius, who was forc'd to make use of all he Skill, to new model and regulate an Army, parte which for want of Discipline were grown headstrong and licentious, and the rest, newly arriv'd with him felf from colder Climates, were unus'd to the Heat of the Country, and the less fit for Scrvice: Be lides there was no good Correspondence at first be tween 'em, which with great Industry he ender vour'd to procure, before he thought fit to enter upon Action. His first Care upon his Arrival Africk was to fecure Vincentius, who having been Romanus his Deputy, had concurr'd with him in all his Infolence and Extortion: To this Service he de puted Gildo, the Brother of Firmus, who continued then firm in his Obedience to the Romans, tho he afterwards revolted from them in the Days of He norius. At Igilgitanum, where he first landed, it by chance met with Romanus, whom for the prelent he dismis'd without any Reproach, to take care of the advanc'd Guards, but not long after, upon his Arrival at Sitifu, gave Orders for his Apprehention Firmul

Chap J. XLV. Valentin Valent, Gratian. 143

Firmus hearing to renowh'd a Commander was fent: against him, began to doubt of his Success, and therefore submitted himself by Messengers fent on purpose to him, and ask'd Pardon for what was past, affirming be was forc'd upon is, not by his own Will. but the Injuries and Indignities he had receiv'd from others, who provok'd him to that which he own'd he could no ways justifie. Theodosous thought if prudent to admit of his Submiffion and Excuse, and promis'd to pardon him, upon Receipt of Hoffages for his good Behaviour for the future : After which he march'd to Panchariana, where he had appoint ed the general Rendevouz, and muster a his Army. Having establish'd a good Understanding between em, and by his generous Carriage procur'd the Love of the Inhabitants, he marchid to a Place call'd Twbus aprius, adjoining to the Mountain Ferratus, where he refus'd to admit of Firmus his second Embassie, because he had not sent the Hostages he had promis'd, and were agreed upon. After which in several Encounters he defeated Massizel and Diss, two other of Firms his Brethren, having wasted the Country round about, and poffefs'd himfelf of a firong Town, which he made choice of for a Magazine, in cafe he should think sit to penetrate farther into the Country. These Proceedings very much dishearten'd Firmus, who thereupon fent some Christian Bihops with the Hostages he promis'd, to intercede with Theodofins in his Benalf. Theodofins receiv'd 'em with much Civility, and, upon a Promife that his Army should be supply'd with Provisions, difmiss'd 'em with a favourable Answer to Firmus; which encourag'd the Moor to make the General a Visit, having first sent some Presents before hand to make way for his Reception. As he drew near he kap'd from his Horse, being surpriz'd at the Lustre of the Roman Enlight, and the awful Appearance of

the

the

And T W

in-

Heat

Be

des

ota

al in been

n all

de nud

A he

H

, he

efent

re of

n his fion.

1777111

the Commander. He bow'd himfelf to the and with Looks full of Contrition bewail'd his and Rashness, and begg'd Pardon for his Of Theodosius receiv'd him very graciously, and given him all the Encouragement he expected desir'd, dismis'd him well pleas'd with his Em tainment. At his Departure he left some of his a Relations behind him for Hostages, and promi to restore the Prisoners he had taken when he revolted. Accordingly two Days after he fun der'd Icofium, together with the military Enfi and whatever elfe he had feiz'd, delivering all into the Hands of the Romans.

At a Place call'd Tipasa, Theodosius met with the Ambassadors of the Mazices, a Nation inhabit the Eastern Parts of Mauritania Casariensis, who join'd with Firmus in the Revolt: They came fubmit themselves in the Name of the whole b on, and to beg Pardon for their Offence. The Sins return'd 'em a very furly Answer, telling em was resolv'd to chastise their Insolence, and pu 'em for their Perfidy to the Romans. With Message he dismiss'd 'em, and proceeded to a rea, a City Firmus had feiz'd upon by Stratagem the beginning of the Rebellion, and after he had most ruin'd it with Fire and Sword, deliver'd it as a Prey to the Barbarians. Here Theodofius for present dispos'd of the first and second Legions, were to fecure it in the best manner they could gainst any farther Attempts of the Enemy. W he continu'd here he found, upon a more name Firmus his Enquiry, that Firmus mean'd nothing less than Per that he only watch'd an Opportunity of attack him at the best Advantage, and destroying him a his Army. Whereupon removing to Sugabarry

Town of Mauritania Cafariensis, he punished a Re treacherous Dealings.

man Cohort, whom he had feiz'd there, and who had

he n

ipor

nto

tanc

o th

er.

есиг

Barb

Natio

e wa

pon

reath

eopl

vho b

ary (

fmig

aree i ng up

hole

etwix tir'd

cour

rder t

roy'd

iftool ipply

g to hich g

ley Ac liber

fe Re

canus

Warn

14; W

irs, h

ethod

had formerly revolted to the Enemy. From thence e march'd farther up into the Country, and fell pon the Mazices, who having collected themselves nto one Body made at first a very vigorous Refilance, but were at length overthrown, and put all the Sword, except fome few that cry'd for Quarer. After this he detach'd part of his Forces to cure some Places that lay too much expos'd to the Barbarians, and proceeded on towards fome other Nations that had favour'd the Revolt. In his March e was met by the Moors, who were pouring down pon him in great Multitudes from all Quarters. reathing nothing but Fury and Destruction. These eople had been rais'd by Cyria, Firmus his Sifter, tho being a Woman of great Wealth and extraordiary Conduct had encourag'd em with the Promise f mighty Rewards. Theodofius, who was then but bree thousand five hundred strong, declin'd fightg upon fuch great Odds, for fear of lofing his hole Army, and therefore preferving a Medium etwixt a Fight and a Flight, he gave Ground, and tir'd by Degrees. With this the Enemy were fo courag'd that they stopp'd up all the Passages, in der to cut off his Retreat; and had certainly deroy'd the whole Army, had not the unwary Moors iftook fome of their own Countrymen for a fresh pply coming to Theodofins, who were indeed marchg to join them with some Romans at the Head, hich gave ground to the Mistake: Affrighted arthis ey fled in great Precipitation, and left the Romans liberty to make their Escape. Theodofius made a' e Retreat with the Army to a Place call'd Mekanum, where having punish'd some Deserters, as Warning to the reft, he came in February to Ti-4; where reflecting upon the Posture of his Afis, he began to manage the War after another ethod, and without entring into the Field, he refoly'd the Commander. He bow'd himfelf to the Green and with Looks full of Contrition bewail'd his Fe and Rashness, and begg'd Pardon for his Offen Theodosius receiv'd him very graciously, and havi given him all the Encouragement he expected or desir'd, dismis'd him well pleas'd with his Entertainment. At his Departure he left some of his near Relations behind him for Holtages, and promised to restore the Prisoners he had taken when he first revolted. Accordingly two Days after he furrent der'd Icofium, together with the military Enfigue and whatever elfe he had feiz'd, delivering all up into the Hands of the Romans.

At a Place call'd Tipasa, Theodosius met with the Ambassadors of the Mazices, a Nation inhabiting the Eastern Parts of Mauritania Casariensis, who had join'd with Firmus in the Revolt: They came to fubmit themselves in the Name of the whole Nation, and to beg Pardon for their Offence. Theods sus return'd 'em a very surly Answer, telling em le was resolv'd to chastise their Insolence, and punis 'em for their Perfidy to the Romans. With this Message he dismis'd 'em, and proceeded to Cafe rea, a City Firmus had feiz'd upon by Stratagem in the beginning of the Rebellion, and after he had almost ruin'd it with Fire and Sword, deliver'd it up as a Prey to the Barbarians. Here Theodosius for the present dispos'd of the first and second Legions, who were to fecure it in the best manner they could a gainst any farther Attempts of the Enemy. While he continu'd here he found, upon a more narrow Firmus his Enquiry, that Firmus mean'd nothing less than Peace, that he only watch'd an Opportunity of attacking him at the best Advantage, and destroying him and his Army. Whereupon removing to Sugabarri, 1 treacherous Dealings.

> Town of Mauritania Cafariensis, he punith'd a Ro fairs, Metho man Cohort, whom he had feiz'd there, and who

ha

he

up

int

Ital

to

ter.

feci

Bar

Nat

he v

upo

brea

Peop

who

nary

of m

three

ing t whol

betw

retir'

encou

order

ftroy'

milto

Suppl

ing to which they f at libe fafe R

Lucani

War

Mata;

had formerly revolted to the Enemy. From thence he march'd farther up into the Country, and fell upon the Mazices, who having collected themselves into one Body made at first a very vigorous Refistance, but were at length overthrown, and put all to the Sword, except some few that cry'd for Quarter. After this he detach'd part of his Forces to fecure some Places that lay too much expos'd to the Barbarians, and proceeded on towards fome other Nations that had favour'd the Revolt. In his March he was met by the Moors, who were pouring down upon him in great Multitudes from all Quarters. breathing nothing but Fury and Destruction. These People had been rais'd by Cyria, Firmus his Sifter, who being a Woman of great Wealth and extraordinary Conduct had encourag'd 'em with the Promise of mighty Rewards. Theodofius, who was then but three thousand five hundred strong, declin'd fighting upon fuch great Odds, for fear of lofing his whole Army, and therefore preferving a Medium betwixt a Fight and a Flight, he gave Ground, and retir'd by Degrees. With this the Enemy were fo encourag'd that they stopp'd up all the Passages, in order to cut off his Retreat; and had certainly defroy'd the whole Army, had not the unwary Moors miltook some of their own Countrymen for a fresh Supply coming to Theodofins, who were indeed marching to join them with some Remans at the Head, which gave ground to the Mistake: Affrighted arthis they fled in great Precipitation, and left the Romans a liberty to make their Escape. Theodofius made a life Retreat with the Army to a Place call'd Mutwanum, where having punish'd some Deserters, as Warning to the reft, he came in February to Ti-Ma; where reflecting upon the Posture of his Affairs, he began to manage the War after another Method, and without entring into the Field, he refolv'd

ŕ

h

19 ù

il-

IA

ce

Row.

Ho

ad

1 CC 21 for th he his hav MRS to . nity the afte ces from from Deat fay i fear for h nt an his I Cour Worth fhoul own e before ts he

i

folv'd to tire out the Enemy, like Fabias of old, Arts and Stratagems. He dispatch'd some were skilful in the Art of Persuasion, to the nei bouring Nations, to endeavour by Threats and Pro miles to draw 'em into an Association with him Of this his politick Proceeding Firmus was quick fenfible, and knowing it the only way to ruin him tho' he had a sufficient Guard about his Perand an Army at Command, rais'd with great In ftry and no less Expence, he took the Advantage a dark Night, and retir'd with great Secrefie to the Mountains, which by reason of the Rocks and Pr cipices were in a great measure inaccessible. Multitude, now without a Head, were so distinct. en'd at his sudden Departure, that they quickly difpers'd themselves, leaving their Camp to the Rimans; upon which when Theodofins had feiz d he wasted the Country at his Pleasure, killing all who had the Courage to make any Resistance, and place fuch Governors over the Nations through which he pass'd as he had great Reason to confide in. Firm found the General pursu'd him very close, and there fore made all the Hafte he could from him, attended only with a few Servants in whom he could truft throwing away whatever things of Value he with him, which might retard him in his Flig He never rested 'till he was got into the Country of the Isastenses, who very chearfully undertook in Protection; by whose Affistance he often reduce the Romans to great Straits, over-powering in with superior Numbers, falling upon 'em in advatageous Places, and at Times they little expected em However Theodofins his Fortune at length prevails he overthrew the Enemy in two or three Battel in one of which Mazaca, Firmus his Brother, w taken Prisoner, and dy'd presently of his Wound Evasius, a Person of great Authority among em, and

Chap.I. XLV. Valentin. Valens, Gratian. 147

Floris, his Son, were burnt slive for affilting the Rebels, and Firmes himself with great Difficulty elcap'd. These Disadvantages by degrees tir'd the Haftenses, who at last grew weary of espousing the Interest of an unfortunate Man, and having been weary'd out by the frequent Alarms Theodofins gave em, dropp'd off from him one by one, and left him almost alones of this Condition, whilst he was confidering of an Escape, he was seized by Igmazen, Prince of that Country, and clapp'd into Pri- Firmus fon; where to avoid the Terror and Difgrace of feiz'd. the Punishment he apprehended from the Romans, felf. he hang'd hinnfelf. Theodofies receiv'd the News of his Death with a great deal of Satisfaction, and having order d Caftor and Martinianus, two of Romanus his Accomplices, to be burnt alive, he return'd to Sitifis, where he was receiv'd with much Solemnity, to the universal Joy of the Inhabitants.

できまたは古事品が出

luce

en vas

l'em alla

attek

, W

n, an

Flora

Thus were the Troubles in Africk compos'd by Theodofithe great Prudence and Industry of Theodofius, who, us after all his great Explains and the michael his Serviafter all his great Exploits, and the mighty Servi- ces, put to ces he had render'd the Empire, was by an Order Death. from Court beheaded at Carthage. We can't leath from History the Reasons for which he was put to Death. They who are the least inclin'd to Valent, fay it was done by his Procurement; and that for fear he should be the Man design d by the Oracle for his Successfor, in regard of his extraordinary Menit and great Archievements. Others fay he ow'd his Death to the malicious Suggestions of certain Courtiers, who envy'd him the Monours he had worthity acquir'd, and could not endure any Man mould be better than themselves. According to his own earnest Desire he was Baptized at Carthage just before he dy'd, and was as exemplary in his Death to he had been glorious in his Life.

The

f

ti

C

W

P

in

P

gr

111

th

fio

tan

tiv

the

tho

bus

hac

Re

littl

Was

and

Noi

vide

cret

muc

prese

Was

prov

white

Hand

Was

gard

Good

ty in

Valentinian's Government, fo was it contrary to receiv'd Maxim he usually follow'd, which was feverely to punish the Common Soldiers upon the least Misdemeanour, but not so much as listen to. ny Complaints offer'd against the Superior Offices;

The Fall of this great Man, as it was a Scandalo lyricum.

which Remissness made 'em proud, insolent and to rannical in the feveral Provinces, and gave Occasion New Tron- to a great many Diforders: As about this time the bles in Il- Commander in chief in Illyricum had, contrary to all Laws of Hospitality, perfidiously murder de binius, King of the Quadi, at a Peak, to which debinius, had in civil Terms been invited by him; upo which the Quadi, and other Nations, broke with great Violence into the Roman Territories. I kpov fome are of Opinion, that Gabinius was a Roman, and Governor of the Province, and that by his Order the King was Affassinated; but Ammians, whose Authority must be of greater Weight in this Case, tells us, Gabinius was the King, and that Marcellianus, Son to Maximinus, that cruel Incendiary, was then Governor of the Province; that V. lentinian, who from the first time of his Advancement had been over sedulous in fortifying the Borders of the Empire, had built Forts over the Ifer, upon the Territories of the Quadi, as if their Country had been within the Roman Pale; that the Inhabitants, who were justly alarm'd at it, endeavourd by their Messengers to hinder the Prosecution of the Defign; that Marcellianus, who was fent to com mand the Army in those Parts by his Father's Pro curement, return'd a very civil Answer, and invited Gabinius the King, and some others, to a Banquet and as he was taking his Leave, without the lead fuspicion of Treachery, got him to be murderd.

At this not only the Quadi, but the neighbou A. D. ring Nations, who made the Cafe their own, wer 374. highly highly incens'd, and uniting themselves in one Body, they pas'd the Danube with great Fury, fell in the time of Harvest upon the Reapers, whom they maffacred in a cruel manner, and return'd loaden with a very great Booty; in this confusion Constantina, the Daughter of Constantins, whom they were then conducting through those Parts in order to be marry'd to Gratian, had fallen into their Hands, had not Messala, Governor of the Province attending her, put her into a Chariot in great hafte, and convey'd her with speed to Sirmium, twenty fix Miles distant from thence. In the mean time the Barbarians renew'd their Incurfions to the utter Ruin of several of the Inhabitants, whom in a cruel manner they led away Captive, having first burnt their Houses and wasted their Possessions. Sirminm it self, the Capital of those Parts, seem'd to be in great Danger. Probus, the Prafectus Pratorio, who the Year before had born the Confulship with Gratian, was then Resident in it; a Man, tho' of Noble Birth, so little acquainted with the Terrors of War, that he was amaz'd at the Report of the bloody Slaughters and barbarous Cruelties they had committed; the Noise of which encreasing every Day more, he provided himself with swift Horses in order to a secret and fhameful Flight; from this he was, with much ado, diffuaded by those about him, who represented to him how the Soldiers, whose Duty it was to defend the Place, would by his Example provide for their own Safety, and fo quit the City, which must unavoidably fall into the Enemy's Hands. After this fo reasonable a Remonstrance he was compelled by Shame to flay, and so out of regard to his own Safety, rather than the Publick Good, he took all imaginable Care to put the City in a Posture of Desence, and was so industrious 3

Qı-

that

cen-

Va

nct-

Bor-

Ar, Olin-In

the Om-

vited

met

leaf

rd.

bou

Wer

ighly

R

21

O

fro Ti

Ca ral

mo

fut

the

by lon

felv

Was

con

WIL

Par

for ling

Her

Tar

Was the

Thi

quif

Inte

deav

vern be K

turn of h

adhe

to th

therein, that the Barbarians thought not fit to tack it, but diverted their Course in Pursuit Aquitius, whom they conceiv'd to have been Contriver of Gabinius his Dearly and hearing was retir'd into the remotest Parts of Valeria i refolv'd to follow him; in their Way they with two Legions, the Pannonia and Mal were fent to oppose 'em, and were of Strength ficient to have restrain'd their Fury, had they fell into an unseasonable Contention between th felves for the Honour of Precedency; this Diff ruin'd those, who had they been united wo have been invincible; for the Barbarians, who were too cunning not to be fensible of their Advantage Two Legi- without waiting for the Signal of Battel, fell first by the Barbarians.

ons cut off with great Fury upon the Masiacan Legion, who little expecting fo sudden an Onset, fell in gre Numbers before they had time to take to the Arms; this encourag'd the Enemy to break in upon the Pannonian, which they quickly routed, ki ling all those whom the Sense of their Danger had not by a speedy Flight secur'd.

The Loss of fo many Men, which was entirely owing to their own Folly, was in some measure repair'd by the Success of the Army, which fought under the Conduct of Theodofins, Son of him we lately mention'd, and Governor of Master who with a Courage and Conduct exceeding his Years, defended it against the Incursions of the Barbanans, and worsted 'em so often, the' they thought with Numbers to over-power him, that in Delpu of any farther Success they begg'd Pardon for what was pals'd, and Peace for the future; which having obtain'd, they for some time religiously observ'd it, being kept in awe by a Supply of Soldiers fent out of Gaul for the Defence of Illyricum. During these Disorders in the North, the Tiber, through excellive Rains

151

Rains, overflow'd its Banks to that degree, that all the lower Parts of Rame were laid under Water, and the Inhabitants forc'd to secure themselves upon the Hills, where they had perish'd with Hunger, had not Claudius. Præsect of the City, taken Care to have a seasonable Supply sent 'em in Boats from the Parts adjacent. These Overslowings of the Tiber were usually the Forerunners of some Publick Calamity, to which the Empire was now so generally accustom'd, that the present Danger being remov'd the People had no Apprehensions of the suture.

This treacherous piece of Crueky, exercis'd upon the Person of Gabinius in the North, was follow'd by an Act equally detestable in the East, where some Persons, who reap'd an Advantage to themselves from the publick Confusions, among whom was Terentius, a Commander in the adjacent Parts, continually by their Letters alarm'd the Emperor with the finister Practices and ambitious Designs of Para, King of Armenia, constantly reproaching him for the Death of Cylax and Artabanes, and reviling him as an infolent Oppressor of the People. Hereupon he was invited in a Royal minner to Tarfus in Cilicia, where when he was arriv'd he was detain'd Prisoner, without Permission to go to the Emperor, or learn the reason of his Restraint. This unaccountable Proceeding made him more inquisitive and sollicitous, especially when by secret Intelligence he understood that Terentius had endeavour'd by Letters to perfuade the Roman Governer to fend fome other Person immediately to be King of Armenia in his stead, lest upon his Return into his own Country he should, in Revenge of his ill Ufages persuade his Subjects no longer to achere to the Raman Empire, but submit themselves to the Perfant, who kood ready upon any Conditions

ly re-he we ho

is, it has it, out ofe ive

n,

Mi

the

Bι

w

and

AI

w

the

Pa

to

fol

de

qu

Tr

un

fo !

Ta

Ex

fcr wh

He

ter

dru

fon

ate

cut

vol

flyi

Bai

ctio

hac

for hay

the

may

to

Miles

tions to receive them. This made him conclude that without timely Care he should be inevitable destroy'd, and therefore he resolv'd upon a speed Flight, which he attempted with the Affiftance of three hundred of his own Subjects in whom he could rely, and who very earnestly persuaded him to it. They took care to supply him with Horses fit for his Purpose, and towards the Evening watching their Opportunity they fet forward together, guided more by their Courage than Conduct, as it is usual with Men in any hazardous or emergent Exigency. They were not got clear of the Suburbs before the Governor of the Province overtook 'em, and finding it impossible to stop him by Force, he endeavour'd by Persuasions to detain him; but he found him too resolute to be prevail'd upon, and therefore delifted for fear of drawing his own Life into Danger by too obstinate an Entreaty. Presently after he was overtaken by a whole Legion, fent on purpose to hinder his Escape, but he fac'd about with fo much Resolution, and charg'd 'em with so desperate a Courage, that they made more halte to fly from him, than they had done to approach him; after this he proceeded without any Disturbance, and travelling Night and Day for two Days together he at last reach'd the Emphrate, which he pass'd with much Difficulty, and after a short Repose pursu'd his Journey with extraordinary Diligence. Valens having notice of his Escape concluded he would infallibly fall off from him, and therefore fent a thousand Archers under the Command of two Principal Officers to Waylay him, and bring him back: They being well acquainted with the Country, through which he wander'd an utter Stranger, travell'd through more compendious Roads, and overtook him: Having divided their Forces they seiz'd on two Passes three

Chap.I. XLV. Valentin. Valens, Gratian. 153

Miles distant from each other, at one of which they thought themselves certain of surprising him. But being informed of his Danger by a Traveller, who was coming that Way, he took a By-Path, and piercing through a thick Wood he escap'd the Ambufcade, and got fafe into his own Kingdom, whilst the Remans, who waited a long time for their Prey, were fufficiently laugh'd at for their Pains. This Disappointment was a great Vexation to Valens, who grew every Day more and more refolv'd upon his Destruction, and sent private Orders to Trajan, who commanded the Roman Forces quarter'd in Armenia, by all means to effect it. Trajan, in Obedience to his Instructions, readily undertook it, and by degrees wrought himself into fo much Credit with the King, by frequenting his Table, and producing Letters from Valens full of Expressions of Kindness to Para, that he made no scruple of accepting of a Dinner at his House, to which Trajan had in a solemn manner invited him. He was receiv'd with the highest Respect, and entertain'd in a Royal manner, and after he had drunk him up to a high pitch, Trajan, pretending fome necessary Occasions, withdrew, and immediately fent in a Villain provided for the purpole, who Para, King cut the young Prince in pieces as he vainly endea- of Armevour'd to defend himself, the rest of the Guests nia, treaflying in great Consternation from so bloody a murder'd. Banquet.

rby

ld

'n ole

out

g'd ide

ny

WO

tes,

di-

E-

OM

der

ay-

well he

ore

ring hret

liles

This inhospitable Proceeding was a great Affliction to saper, King of Persia, who conceived he had lost in Fara a firm Friend and faithful Allie, for such he made no doubt but in time he should have found him; on the other side the Romans gather'd Courage, at which he was not a little dismay'd, and therefore he thought it the safest way to propose by his Ambassadors to Valens, that Armenia,

t

i

le

21

th

th

he

in

to

CHI

by

vai

Wa

ma

the

mo

WO

of i

the thin

notl

into high

to C

deca

nube.

Cou

Sebaj

my's

Expo

menia, which had been the Cause of so Confusions, might be entirely ruin'd, or at les that the Roman Garrasons might be recalled our Iberia, and Aspacures, whom he had advanced might be permitted to Reign there without any Disturbance. To this Watens answer'd. That he was resolv'd to stand to the late Division of Iberia and fee the Treaty punctually observ'd; and after feveral Messages and Remonstrances on one side and the other, the Emperor fent away Victor General of the Horse, and Urbicius Governor of Mesopora mia, to Saper; who were to affure him, That he Suffer'd the Armenians to be at their own Liberty, and ferbore molesting the Roman Garrison in Fore call'd Sauromaces, he Should be forc'd apon fuch Measures as would be no ways agreeable to him. These Instructions were just and prudent but the Ambassadors went beyond their Commission on, and imprudently accepted of some small Territories that had been offer'd 'em in Armenia, and without effecting any thing elfe they return'd home. They were follow'd by another Ambassador from Persia, whom the Emperor kindly receiv'd, and entertain'd him with much Magnificence, tho all his Offers were rejected, and Valens prepar'd to affault Person with three Armies at once in the beginning of the Spring. Saper, thus disappointed of his Es pectation, was highly exasperated, but concealing his Indignation, he gave Orders to his Chief Off cers by Force to recover those Territories the Reman Ambassadors had lately possess'd themselves of in the Name of the Emperor, and cut off, if pollible, the Garrison in Sauromaces, which Orders they executed accordingly. Of all this Valens was inform'd, but found himself unable to resent it as he ought; the Empire being threaten'd by a general Invalion of the Gothish Nation, to a Narration of which the Course of the History will in a short time conduct us.

Chap. I. XLV. Valentin. Valens. Gratian. 155

中国事品中

Re-

中的一种

era o

All this while Valentinian was employ'd in Building Forts upon the Rhine, and wasting the German Territories, in which he was often opposed with great Vigour by Macrisons, King of the Country, a haughty resolute Prince, but was this Year diverted upon an Information that the Barbarians were in great Numbers Invading Illyricum, whose Infolence he was resolv'd to chastise, and therefore at an Enterview between him and Macrianus upon the Rhine near Mentz, he concluded a Peace, which the latter kept inviolable 'till his Death. After this he return'd to Triers, where he spene the Winter in concerting the Measures he was to take in order to his Expedition early in the Spring into Illyricum, which had been this Year miferably wasted by the Samuara and the Quadit accordingly he advanc'd thither as foon as the Winter was over, and was met in the Way by Ambalfadors from the Sarmata, who in a very submissive manner throwing themselves at his Feet, defir'd him to entertain a more favourable Opinion of their Nation, who he would find upon Examination were guilty of none of those heavy Accusations that were urg'd against them. After they had often aftern'd the fame thing, he told 'em. That as yet he would determine nothing, but suspend his Judgment 'till his Arrival into those Parts, that were faid to have been fo highly injur'd by 'em. After this he proceeded on to Cornuntum, at this Day call'd Haimberg, an old decay'd Town of Illyritum, feated upon the Danube, and very convenient for the Defence of the Country. From hence he detach'd Merobandes and Sebastian with a Party of Foot to waste the Enemy's Borders, and he himfelf remov'd with great Expedicion to a Place call'd Acincum, from whence he pass'd his Men over the River, and enter'd into the Territories of the Quadi, who from the Mou tains, whither they had retir'd with their Wives and Children upon the first Notice of his Ap. proach, in great Consternation beheld the Motion of his Army. After his detach'd Parties had fcower'd the Plains, killing all they met straggling behind, and burnt their Houses, he return'd in Safety with his whole Army to Acincum, where he continu'd 'till the Year was almost spent, defiring to find out some convenient Winter-Quarters in those frozen Tracts, but could meet with none fo proper as Sabaria, call'd at present Sarvar, the he found that far from being convenient, or fuitable to his Wishes, and therefore he continu'd his March along the River fide 'till he came to Brege tio, where he was admonish'd of his approaching li

h

t

N

di

li

fo

di

th

len re

th

W

T

ke

lat

lice

Son

the

Co

the

En

ano

inc

upl

gra

but

Several O- End by several Omens; for a few Days before mens pre- Blazing Stars were feen, which in Ammianus his ceding the Opinion forerun the Downfal of great Persons. At Valentini- Sirmium, the Palace, Court and Forum were burnt by Lightning; and whilst he was at Sabaria an Owl perch'd upon the top of his Bath, and was not to be frighted or forc'd away by the Multitude, who affaulted it very earnestly with Darts and Stones. As he was marching from that Place, he refolv'd to pass out at the same Gate he enterd, intending to fignifie by it that he should quickly return in Safety to Gaul; but as they were clearing it of some Rubbish, which through a long Neglect it had contracted, the Portcullis fell, nor could all the Endeavours they us'd raise it again, so that after they had loft much Time about it, he was forc'd to go out at another Gate. The Night before he dy'd he thought he faw his Wife, who was then absent, sitting by him in a melancholy Posture, with her Hair dishevell'd, and in a mournful Habit, which which Ammianus fancies was his Genius, then in that disconsolate manner forsaking him. In the Morning he appear'd with a heavy, dejected Countenance, and his Horse, whilst he was going to mount, bounding with ungovernable Fury, as if it disdain'd to receive him, he commanded his Querry's right Hand to be cut off, because he unwillingly gave him a Blow as he was struggling to place him in the Saddle; this was agreeable to the Cruelty of his Nature, and had been undoubtedly executed upon his faithful Servant, had not Cerealis, Master of the Horse, at the Hazard of his own Life deferr'd the Execution.

on

bei

ing

in ere

efi-

ters

one

ho

ita-

his ege-

ing

ore

his

At

irnt

an

not ude.

and

he

er'd,

ckly

ring

lect

1 all

t af-

fore

Was

ture,

hich

After this came the Ambassadors from the Quadi, humbly fuing for a Peace, and an Act of Oblivion for what was past; which that they might in fome measure delerve, they offer'd a Supply of Soldiers, and such other Matters as they thought at that time agreeable to the Emperor's Affairs. lentinian having consider'd of the Motion, thought it reasonable to give 'em Audience, and they were thereupon admitted into the Confistory, where they were commanded to declare what they had to fay. They, with their Bodies bent to the Ground in token of Submillion, declar'd upon Oath, that the late Devastations were not to be consider'd as a publick Act of the whole Nation, but committed by some Free-Booters living upon the Borders, without the Knowledge or Consent of the chief Men in the Country; and that they had been provok'd to it by the Fort lately built upon their Territories by the Emperor's Order, contrary to the Rules of Justice, and the Roman Interest. Valentinian was extremely incens'd at this Discourse, and in a high Passion upbraided their whole Nation as thankless and ungrateful, yowing to be feverely reveng'd upon 'em; but in the midst of his Discourse sunk down upon his Seat like one struck from Heav'n, and feeted have loft both Life and Voice together. bout him convey'd him carefully into his Cham and laid him on his Bed, where he was feiz'd with Convulsion Fits, and violent Contorsions of his The Death Limbs, in the Agonies of which he breath'd out of Valenti- his last, in the five and fiftieth Year of his Acc. and twelfth of his Reign, A. D. 375. after the third Consulship of Grasian and of Aquitins: For tho' Aufonius has affign'd Pontius Paulinus for Conful this Year, yet it is agreed on all Hands, that the Wars, with which the Empire was attack'd or threaten'd on every fide, prevented that Annual

ŀ

in

te

be

Vi

thi

ing

ly

mi

Wa

and Te

exi

tie

bar ing

fity

Defignation.

Various are the Accounts of this Emperor's Death; even Ammianus is inconfiftent with himfelf, or at leaft his Interpreters have made him fo. Some will have it, that he imputes his Death to the fudden Stoppage of the Blood, others to the violent Gushing of it forth, which agrees better with the rest of the Text, and other Authors who have written of the fame Subject; who have left us this Account of it! That after he had given the Ambassadors Audience he was affronted at the Meanness of their Equipage and their beggarly Appearance, demanding with some Heat, if their Country afforded Men of no better Quality, that were more fit to appear before him? He was answer'd, that he had now in his Presence the very best of the Nation; whereupon he fell into a violent Passion, vehemently lamenting his own and the Misfortune of the Roman People, who had to do with so beggarly a Nation, that not content to live within their own Bounds, had the Arregance to rife up in Arms, and affront the Majesty of the Empire. This he deliver'd with fo much Violence, that, according to Socrates, he open'd every Ven in his Body, and brake the Arteries afunder, out of which iffu'd to large a Flux of Blood, that he instantly dy do at a Castle call'd at that time Bergetie, supposed to be what we now call Gran.

Thus dy'd Valentinian, after a Reign of twelve Years wanting an hundred Days, during which he apply'd himself diligently to the Defence of the Borders, the reinforcing of his Army, building of new Forts where any were wanting, and repairing the old ones upon the Rhine, to that not an Enemy could pals undiscover'd into the Roman Territories, He was generally fuccessful against the Germans, and put a Stop to the Devastations made by the Saxone, a People no less greedy of Blood than Plunder, whom he forc'd first to fue for Peace, and afterwards by a Stratagem that had more of Profit than Honour in it, procur'd them all to be cut off. By his Lieutenants in this Island he fettled the Affairs of Britain; he suppress'd Valentine a Pannonian Exile, who was designing to disturb the Publick Tranquility, before it was well known what he was attempting: He restor'd the Peace of Africk, after it had been violently shock'd by the Insurrection of Firmus and the Barbarians, and he was in a fair way of effecting the fame in Illyricum, had he not been fuddenly fnatch'd off by Death.

S.

ot

Ac

1¥č

ng

he

the

it"

CE,

age

mè ter

m?

m

WI bad

tent

ince the

nee, em

OUL

of

From what hath been faid, the Reader will eafily form to himself, a Character of this Prince, and rader. must own that his greatest Fault was Cruelty; which was attended by another of no less Consequence, and to which Men of his implacable, vindictive Temper are feldom subject, an over Credulity, which expos'd him to the Artifices of his mercenary Courtiers, who miserably impos'd on his Understanding, barring him up from the Access of Persons of Learning and Fidelity. He was coverous to a high degree, a Vice some Excuse in him from the Neceshty the State lay under by reason of the Wars in

His Chas

Perfia,

h

h

ca

de

th

to

the

at

Di

lov

He

mi

gol

his

not left

Civ

infa

X

Car

to b whi

unea

cide they

per c

afraid

rathe

Persia, which had very much exhausted the Public Treasury, and put him upon many violent and legal ways of raising Mony. He had so high an o pinion of his own Accomplishments, that he hated all who were eminent for Learning, Riches, Nobility, Valour, or fo much as a genteel Fancy in their Dress. He pretended himself a great Enemy to all Cowards, and yet appear'd timorous and dejected upon every trivial Occasion or groundless Report, In the Choice of his Judges he generally had regard to Men of Temper and Æquanimity, but if he accidentally promoted any of a cruel relentless Dispofition, he would presently cry out they were so many Cassii or Lycurgi, and encourag'd them in their rigorous Proceedings. These are the greatest Vices and Imperfections with which this Emperor is charg'd, and are abundantly out-weigh'd by his Virtues, which feem'd to render him worthy that high Sphere in which he mov'd. He may be faid to have been a Father to the Provinces, for whole Safety he provided in the many Forts and Calties he built upon the Borders, at the same time eating them as much as he could in the Abatement of their Taxes. He might have pass'd for an exact Observer of Military Discipline, had he not been too partial to the General Officers, who abus'd his Favours, and gave a Beginning to those Commotions in Britain, Africk, and Illyricum. Tho' he had many Relations, who upon his Advancement expeded mighty Preferments, yet he indulg'd none of 'em any farther than confifted with the publick Interest, preferring none to any confiderable Posts, his Brother Valens except, whom in a time of Danger he assum'd for his Collegue, and with whom he reign'd in perfect Concord. He was excellent at the Invention of new Sorts of Arms; and having from his Youth been inur'd to Hardship, he knew admirably well how to manage, govern and conduct on Army. He was very careful in the Disposal of the greatest Offices, fuffering no Places to be bought or fold during his Government, or any to be preferred to the Command of a Province, who were concern'd in the Management of the publick Money. In his Entertainments he was friendid but not profuse, in his Person comely, in his Conversation agreeable, of a vast Memory and ready Elocution, knowing well how to accommodate himself to all Times and Occasions. As he was very chaste himself, so he endeavour'd by his Example to propagate that Virtue throughout his Court, and where-ever he came. As to his Religion, he constantly adher d to the Orthodox Faith, in that Diverlity of Opinions which at that time divided the World: But avoiding all Disputes, he suffer'd the rest of his Subjects to follow their own Persuasions without any Molestation. He is blam'd by the Ecclelialtical Writers, for permitting his Brother to perfecute with to much Rigour the Catholick Believers; but we may fay in his behalf, that the Condition of his irs would not allow him in Prudence openly to appose Valens, lest the Heat of their Disputes had kindled up a Civil War in the Empire, which at that time would infallibly have deltroy'd it.

Chap. I. XLV. Valentin. Valens, Gratian. 161

is

d

(e es

er

ial 13,

ri

ny

ed

1-elt,

10-

he n'd

en-

his

bly

well

XVII. Valentinian being dead, his Body with due GRATIAN. Care was prepar'd to be fent to Constantinople, there to be deposited among his Imperial Predecessors; whilst the great Officers of the Court were under uneafie Apprehensions, and uncertain what an Accident fo extraordinary might produce, especially they who knew the inconstant and haughty Temper of the Gallick Soldiers, had great reason to be atraid of some unseasonable Commotions; and the inther because Gratian, who knew nothing of what had

A. D. 375.

ti

m

28

of

W

fin

if

 Z_0

wa

fou

dy'

Ha

cou

In

366

369

ceed

Con

been

fullb

nolo

Whic

were the o cordi

lis, L

Expe

Bu

had happen'd was then absent at Triers, where he Father had order'd him to relide during this Exdition. After some Consultation between themselve they agreed to fend for Merobandes in the Em ror's Name, who had the Command of those Sol diers, to come to him, as if he had been still living; Merobandes, either fuspeding what had happen'd, or being inform'd of it by the Messenger who was fent to him, pretended to the Soldiers that Orders were come from the Emperor to lead em back to the Rhine, where the Barbarians began again to be up in Arms; and pursuant to his Instructions he fent & bastian far out of the way, who was a Man of a quiet easie Temper, but in great Esteem with the Army, and therefore the more to be fear'd in 6 dangerous a Conjuncture. When he arriv'd Camp it was refolv'd in Council, that Valentinian, the Son of the Deceas'd, should be declar'd Emperor. He was then at an hundred Miles distance. It ving in a Village call'd Murocincta with his Mother Justina, Valentinian's second Wife, whom he marry'd after the Decease of the Empress Severa; so that Socrates his Story must fall to the Ground, who accuses Valentinian of Polygamy, and makes him Author of a Law, whereby every Man had the Liberty of having two Wives at a time if he was so in clin'd. He tells us, Justina, whilst she was a Virgin, became acquainted with the Empress Severa, who admitted her into the fame Bath with her fell, where she could not but see and admire her extraordinary Reauty, which the extoll'd in a high meafure to her Husband Valentinian, who immediately marry'd her, without divorcing Severa the Mother of Gratian, whom he had affociated with him in the Imperial Dignity but just before. As he is mistaken in the matter of Fact, so is he in the Quality of Justina, who was no Virgin, but Magnentin

Chap. I. XLW. Valens, Garian, Valenti. II. 163

the Tyrant's Widow Befides this Valentinian the had three Daughters by the Emperor, two of which dy'd Virgins, but the third, call'd Galla, was af-

or nt

TC

the 48, pe-

-li-

her

narfo

pho.

Au-

ber-

Vir-

era,

felf,

tra

nea-

tely

her

n in

mi

ality

atius

the

Valentinian was then a Child, not above four Years of Age, faith Ammianus, the others affirm he was nine, and that he was born in Febr. 366, Gratian and Dagalaiphus being Confust, in which Idatius, the Author of the Alexandrine Chroniele, The mistins, and most of our Modern Writers after em, agree: But if Americanus is right in his Account, we must allow that there were two young Princes of the same Name, and that he who was born in 366; was not the same with him who was created Any flus in 375. This will appear more than probable, if we confider that not only Ammianus, but Victor, Zonaras and Zozimus affirm, that Valentinian, who was made Emperor at his Father's Death, was but four Years old, or thereabouts: Nicephorus faith he dy'd when he was twenty, and it's agreed on all Hands that he was kill'd, An. Dom. 392, which could not pollibly be, if he had been born in 366. In a word, Valentinian Funior, who o born in 366, was Conful together with Aurelius Victor in 369. Now had he been the fame with him who fucceeded his Father in the Empire, and was created Conful with Valens three Years after, the Year had been diffinguish'd in the Tables by his Second Confulfhip, which it is not, tho' Helvious in his Chronology has follow'd the general Opinion. From all which it appears, as we observed before, that there were two of the same Name, one the Son of Valens, the other of Valentinian.

But to return to the Course of the History: According to the Resolution taken in Council, Cereahis. Uncle to this young Prince, was fent with all Expedition for him; who conducted him to the M 2

th

w

ufi

the

and 270 vin

low

any

tha

be

ning

clud

had

ranc

pror

the

they

their

they

who

whic

and i

and i

Grot

drove

when

with conti

went met w came

of Ea

efteen

and re

whom

their

T

Valentini-Camp, where in a folemn manner he was decl an, Son to Emperor, the fixth Day after his Father's D the late Most Men concluded Gratian would be high Emperor, fended at a Promotion confirm'd without his K declared Augustus, ledge or Consent, who notwithstanding livid after in a very peaceable manner with him; ving himself in this matter like a prudent Man.

> rather cherishing his Brother with too much F ness and Respect.

The Hunns. In the mean time a cruel Storm began to g invade the to an Head in the East, which not only occasi the Death of Valens, but fell in a violent m upon the whole Empire. It was first rais'd b Hunns, a Nation almost unknown to the Roman then, inhabiting that Part of Scythia which lay u the Ocean beyond the Fenns of Maotis, call present Tartary. They were a herce savage Pe ignorant of the Use of Fire, feeding altogeth Roots of Herbs, or fuch Flesh as was chased between their Thighs and their Horses Sides; without Houses, wand'ring from Place to Place, spreading themselves sometimes on the Mountains, at others descending into the Vallies, and living like Bruces on whom Nature through a Mistake had conferred Human Shapes; from their Infancy accustom'd to endure the Inconveniences of Cold and Hunger having their Cheeks mangled as foon as they were born to prevent Beards, in the want of which the resembled Eunuchs, but in Appearance were mo terrible and ghaftly. Their Cloaths were either Linnen, or the Skins of a fort of Mice, which they tack'd together, and wore at home and abroad, as wake and afleep, without any Change, 'till they dropp'd afunder. Their Legs were cover'd with Goat-skins, and their Feet with an ill-shapen unfashionable Shoe, which cramp'd'em up when they walk'd, and render'd 'em unfit for Foot-Services

Chap.I.XLV. Valens, Gratian, Valenti.II. 165

their Genius inclining em more to the Horse in which manner of Engagements they excell'd, fighting ufually in Parties drawn up like Wedges; quick in their Onlets, disorderly in their Retreats, furious and discompos'd in their Pursuits, tho' they always avoided attacking the Camp of the Enemy. Having no King they liv'd under no Government, following the Conduct of their Nobility (if they had any fuch among 'em) whom they obey d no longer than they thought fit. They were no more to be trusted in Times of Peace than in War, beginning the one without any Provocation, and concluding the other without any Forecast. had no Sense of Religion, nor that Child of Ignorance, Superstition, but liv'd in common with a promiscuous use of Women, with whom they for the most part coupl'd openly, or if at any time they retird, their Quivers were hung out to let their Neighbours know what they were doing, that

l so

were

Lin-

they

. 1981

with

they

vice.

they might meet with no Disturbance.

These Hunns were near Neighbours to the Alani, who inhabited Scythia beyond Tanais, a River by which Europe is separated from Asa; like the Hunns, and the rest of the Scythians, they wander'd up and down in their Waggons, never Tilling their Ground, but seeding on raw Flesh and Milk; they drove their Cattle in great Herds before 'em, and when they were arriv'd at any pleasant Pasturage, with which the Country abounded, there they continu'd 'till it was all consum'd, and then they went forward with their moveable Cities, 'till they met with fresh Forage, accounting every Place they came at their Native Home. A People impatient of Ease, continually busied in Wars and Dangers, esteeming him only happy who dy'd in the Field, and revising them as idle and degenerate Persons them any Accident had destroy'd, or Age led down

I

7

la

th

th

to

th

th

E

A

in wi at f

the

cou

and

the

ftar

Priz

fho

out ther

Syc

had

goo

down in peace to the Grave. All their Relie confifted in a naked Sword, which they fluck into the Ground, and worthipp d under the N of Mars, the Great Protector of the Regions inhabited; in most respects they resembled Hunns, only they appeard to have been of an civiliz'd Convertation. They were faid so h strange way of foretelling things to come; the a Bough from off a bearing Tree, which they into feveral Pieces; these Pieces they difting by certain Marks, throwing 'em at random I White Linnen Garment; after which the if it was a Publick Concern, if not, the Ma the Houshold, invoking the Deity they world took each Piece up in a folemn manner thrice to ther, and from the Coherence the Marks before printed bore each to the other, they collected Divination. The name of Slavery was not among 'em, being all accounted of Noble Birth and those Persons had the Administration of ther Affairs as their Officers and Judges, who were of most Experience in the Wars.

Into the Territories of these People did the Hunns break with great Violence, and having spoil'd the Country, and laid all waste before 'em, they forc'd those of the Nation, who had out-live their Cruelty, to enter into an Alliance with 'em, by which means having reinforc'd themselves, they fell with incredible Impetuolity upon the Gothe Nations, affaulting first the Dominions of Ermenrich or Ermanaric, who tho' a Martial Prince, yet struck with Consternation at so unexpected an Attempt, put an end to his Troubles by a voluntary Death; after this they fell upon Athaneric, he who had affifted Procepies in his late Ufurpation, who had refolv'd to stand upon his Guard, and was prepar'd for a vigorous Resistance; but the Humi falling

Chap. I.XLV. Valens, Gratian, Valenti. II. 167

falling upon him unawares, he was forc'd to fly to the Mountains, after he had loft fome of his Men; from whence he pass'd in great Consternation down to the Danube, where he rais'd Fortifications to defend himself from any farther Attempts. The Hunns, whose great Booty had render'd em incapable of any hafty Pursuit, were in the mean time grown to terrible to rest of the Goths, that they thought of removing from a Storm which they faw rolling irreliatibly upon 'em, and refolv'd upon Thrace, both for that it was a fertile Country, and was separated by the Ister from those Tracts which lay exposed to the Fury of the Hunns. Having therefore feiz'd on the Banks of the Danube, under the Conduct of Alavivus, they fent their Orators to Valens, by whom, in a most submissive manner, they begg'd leave to be admitted into Thrace, where they promis'd to live peaceably in Subjection to the Empire, to whom they would be ready to fend Aid upon all Occasions,

Tho' the Rumour of these strange Commotions in the Northern Parts ought to have struck all Men with Admiration, as well as Terror, yet they were at first but little regarded at Court, which hitherto the Report of any Wars in those remote Regions could hardly reach before they had been finish'd, and the Fear of 'em was over; but when they fawthe Ambaffadors from the Goths, and knew the Substance of their Embassie, all Wise Men were furpriz'd to hear fuch vast Multitudes of Barbarians should hover about the Banks of the Ister, driven out of the Country by People more barbarous than themselves. And yet there were not wanting some Sycophants about the Person of the Emperor, who had the Impudence to fatter him, and earl his good Fortune upon this Occasion, which had un-M 4 expectedly ehe ing

em, iv'd

hey wet

tary

lling

expectedly brought him a perpetual Supply of Sol diers, with which he could be furnish'd at his Plea happily

11

VI

fure out of Thrace, and thereby fave the Expende of new Levies, to the no small Benefit of his Tres admitted into Thrace.

fury: The imaginary Prospect of this Advan-The Goths tage made him, without any farther Confideration, give Order for their immediate Transportation, which was done with fo much Care and I ligence, as if it had been a Sin to leave any Person who was to be concern'd in the Subversion of the Roman Empire, behind: For feveral Nights and D together, without any Intermission, did they com over in fuch Multitudes, that they, who were appointed to see the Business effected, were in no manner able to compute their Numbers, exceeding faith Ammianus, the Sands upon the Libyan Shore, Destruction follow'd close upon their Heels, and spread it self like a Contagion, infecting what it fed on. But what contributed as much as any thing to the Desolations that follow'd soon after, was the Corruption and Insufficiency of the Governors Commanding then in the Provinces, who by their Covetousness basely eluded the Emperor's Orders, who had ordain'd that none should be admitted 'till they had been first disarm'd; but these Officers, more intent upon their own private Gain and Satisfaction, fuffer'd themselves to be impos'd upon by the Barbarians, who corrupted em with Prefents of their finest Women, most beautiful Boys, and stoutest Slaves, and so were permitted to come over arm'd as they thought fit themselves. Eunapine faith likewise, that the Emperor's Intent was to have the Children of both Sexes first transported, who were to be dispos'd as Hostages throughout the Provinces of the Empire, and Pledges of their good Behaviour, which prudent Defign was un-happily frustrated by the mercenary Conduct of those treacherous Officers.

Chap.I.XLV. Valens, Gratian, Valenti.II. 169

This memorable Passage, which so largely contributed to the Downsal of the Empire, happen'd when Valent, the fifth time, and Valentians were Consuls, in the last Year of the 288th Olympiad, the 1128th Year of Rome, and 28 Years after the first Division of the Empire, An. Dom. 376.

of year of archeological and deep to make region so the left autor is placed in a legice and against a realist surply of the air decrease

The property E of the property was a second

7 oh 2 bloom same as the Manhana set as an

Of white object of additional courses in papers a few and the arranch in the state of the state of ontopic Depote to a series for the life and we have been about.

and the Company of th lications, and the Commons is of facilities

Minaria de la compania de la compania de la compaña d tooka net phu vi nide anodiades was ors

TS.

till

TS.

Sa-

by

of

to ed.

out

ily

a lighted been been to top owner.

CHAP.

I

h

in

pi

th

in

fo

fo :

en:

thr

bar

and

the

the for

the

for che

his The

be p nity

picin

Chi

Fritz

had ty a

CHAP. II.

From the Admission of the Gothe into Thrace, to the Death of Theodosius the Great.

Containing about the Space of 19 Tears.

A. D. 376.

I. TT's observable that a State subsists and flourishes no longer, than whilft it cultivates and improves the Means to which it ow'd its Rife and Pro-The first Romans were plain, hearty and fincere, they went to the Wars with Honour, and return'd with Success, and their very Enemies reap'd the Benefit of their Victories as well as themfelves; for their Virtue always protected those whom their Valour had fubdu'd. They fought for Dominion, but not for Tyranny, and choic rather to be Lov'd than Fear'd; this made the Provinces chearful in their Submission, hearty in their Contributions, and unwavering in their Obedience. In a Word, it is not so much to be admir'd, that from fo small a Beginning they should rife to such a stupendious Height, as that so many Qualities productive of a real Greatness should be found united in one People, diffusing themselves with so exact a Tenor throughout every Part, as to make up the very Life and Being of the whole, How much the Romans, who liv'd in the Age we are now writing of, were fallen off from that Original Perfection, I leave the Reader to imagine, they were grown Effeminate, Factious, Proud and Inconfiderate; the Court was become debauch'd, the Camp licentious, and the Commonalty obstinate and mutinous;

Chap.II.XLV, Valens, Granian, Valenti.II. 171 conquests, that they were not able to maintain and defend their Hereditary Acquisitions; the Conflictution was grown old and crazy, and had lost so much of its natural Vigour, that it must in course have dropped of it self, without receiving an Enemy into its Bowels, that cruelly shook and tore it into pieces; but as some of her ancient Citizens chose to provoke Death by a Sword or Poisson, rather than wait its leisure under the Fatigues of a painful lingring Distemper; so that State, grown old and infirm, may be said to have chosen a violent Subversion, rather than a natural Dissolution.

Ö

Di.

S.

les

m,

10-

nd

ind nies

m

ole ght

Ta-

10-

heir

nce.

that

uch

ities uni-

nake

nuch

now

Per-

were fide-

amp

mu-

As it was the greatest piece of madness to receive fo many Barbarians into the Heart of the Empire. fo it was an equal madness to provoke and exasperate em after they had been admitted. Lupicinus and Maximus were at this time Commanders in Chief throughout Thrace, and by their peraicious Practices haften'd the Ruin of the Country. The Barbarians stood in want of all manner of Provisions, and being bitterly pinch'd with Hunger made their Applications to these Officers, who got all the Dogs they could together, and exchang'd em for fo many Men, amongst whom were the Sons of the first Nobility, whom with the rest they took for their Slaves; besides Lupicinus had dealt treacheroufly with them in feveral Respects, betraying his Truft, and oppreffing 'em upon every Occasion. These Practices irritated a People, case enough to be provok'd, and made em catch at the first Opportunity they met with to be reveng'd, with which Lupicinus himself presented em not long after. The Chief Captains of these People were Alavivus and Fritigern, Men of Gourage and Resolution, who had formerly acted with much Vigour and Animofity against the Empire: These Commanders Lapicinus invited to Dinner at Marcianopolis, where he then refided; and left the ordinary fort at the fa time should press upon him for Provisions, of which they stood in great need, he order'd the G keep 'em off from the Gates of the City, white they defir'd to be admitted as Friends, to buy them Necessaries; betwixt these People and the Roman there happen'd a sharp Dispute, in which the Remans were flain and stripp'd by the Barbarians. Lepicinus was no fooner acquainted with it, but he Fi caus'd all the Attendants, waiting upon the two ing Princes, in the midft of their Mirth to be murderd. de of which when they without the Walls were inform'd, they fell into a great Rage, vowing all manner of Revenge, concluding their Kings would be Poi detain'd Prisoners by the Governor. Of this Fraof tigern, who indeed was afraid he should be secure cat as an Hostage, made a good use; for he earnest the press'd to be dismiss'd, that he might compose and pa bee cifie his Soldiers, whereupon he was discharg'd toge Di ther with Alavivus; for by this time Lupicinus waslo by . overcharg'd with Wine that he knew not what he Wit did; whilit they made hafte to their Countrymen, the to whom they came unexpected, and were received whi with great Joy and Satisfaction. This Advantage Wa they all agreed to improve, and confulted together to b how they might best raise a War, and be revenge grov upon the Romans. They were presently join'd by Nui all the Gothick Nations, who fell with great Fury Prov on, . the] they faw Wha they TION

W

V fi

at

th

upon the Country, wasting all with Fire and Sword. Lupicinus, alarm'd at so dangerous an Insurrection, march'd out against 'em with more Fury than De feretion, and drew up his Army with a Refolution to engage the Barbarians, who, watching their Opportunity, attack'd the Romans with much Bravery, mans defeated by cutting most of them off together with their Comthe Goths. manders, whilst the General with great Precipitat

Chap. M. XLV. Valens, Gratian, Valenti. II. 173

tion fled back into the Ciry. This Defeat was attended with a greater Mischief, for the Barbarians were hereby supply'd with Roman Arms, and ravag'd the Country round about without any Oppofition. And as great Armies very often occasion a Famine and Pestilence, fo at this time both the one and the other rag'd very violently in many Parts of the Empireliance a studieth to all all sections as

A TO THE PER CO IN

en, v'd igs her d by irv ion,

Di-

rion

Op-

om-

vitav cion

These Advantages made the Goths more bold and outragious; for not content to be Mafters of the Field, they were and laid Siege to Adrianople, being some time before join'd by a Body of Forces un- siege Adrider the Conduct of Sucridus and Colins, two Princes anople. of their own Nation, who with their Troops had been long since admitted by the Emperor, and appointed to quarter near that City; and laying hold of this Opportunity, were, upon fome small Provocations receiv'd from the Townsmen, resolv'd to run the Fortune of their Countrymen. They had not been long before the Town, before they found the Difficulty of their Undertaking, and were advis'd by Fritigern to quit the Siege, and content themselves with the Plunder of the wealthy Province, where they were like to meet with no Oppolition, and which would turn more to their Advantage than a War with Walls. Leaving therefore a fufficient Force to block up the Town, they rang'd all over Thrace, growing daily stronger by the Accession of fresh Numbers that came in to 'em. By this means the Province was reduc'd to a most miserable Condition, for they spar'd neither Sex nor Age, plucking the Infants from their Mothers Breafts, who whilst they were lamenting the Death of their Husbands aw their Children murder'd before their Faces. What the Sword had spar'd the Fire destroy'd, and they feem'd the most miserable, whom Fortune, nor

A.D. 377-They be-the Mercy of the Barbarians, had permitted to laft of the state of the state

All this while Valens was at Antioch, intent the King of Persia's Designs, and as narrow ferv'd by him. Upon his first Notice of these gerous Commotions, he was at a loss what Com to take; he fent away Victor, General of the Horfe, to compose Matters in the best manner he could with the Persians; and resolving to remove to Constantingple, he fent Profuturus and Trajan, two of his Go nerals, before him. They were Men of more An bition than Conduct, for instead of endeavouring by Stratagem to cut off and starve such Multitude of Men that fill'd the Mountains and cover'd all the Vallies, they inconfiderately engag'd em to their own Cost, depending too much upon the Legion drawn out of Armenia, who indeed were good Soldiers, but unable to make Head against such Swarms of the Enemy; at length they drove em up beyond the Mountain of Hamus, where they feiz'd upon all the Paffes, hoping to block em up, and deflior 'em by Famine, at least 'till the Pannonian and Trasalpine Auxiliaries could join 'em, who had Order from Gratian to march, under the Conduct of Fries ride, to their Affiffance. Gratian at the same time fent Richameres with some Forces out of Gaul, but the Soldiers deserted in great Numbers as they were upon the March, follicited to it, as it was reported by Merobaudes, who was afraid fo strong a D ment would leave the Borders too much expords So that Richameres join'd with Profuturus and Tre jan, but to little or no effect; for Frigeride was feize with the Gout, or, as his Enemies would have it believ'd, pretended Sickness, and kept himself out of Danger; tho' his eminent Services not long after leave little room for such a Suspicion.

Richo

C tl

fe

go

A

FI the

fro

like OD

fell

Was rale

peri Dan

up i

Way

tain'

Nun

powe

ther

Vanta

in qu

Emp

Berea

egains

Numl

Moun

with a

led.

Chap. M. XLV. Valens, Grarian, Valenti. II. 175

Richemeres having join'd Profusurus and Trajan. the Army march'd to a Place call'd Salices, where the Enemy then lay. Here both Parties engag'd. and fought with so much Obstinacy, that Night alone put an end to the Controversie, and the Romans retir'd, after the Lofs of a great many Men, to Marcianople; tho' it is not easie to determine who had the better of the Day, for the Enemy kept themfelves close seven Days together among the Carriages, not daring to ftir out, or pursue the Romans in their Retreat, 'till they had allur'd the Hunns and Alans to join with them; and then like a mighty Flood they bore down all before them, foreading themselves over all the Coast of Thrace, as far as from the Her to the Mountain Rhodope, devouring like a Plague all they met, and scattering Destruction on every fide. At a Place call'd Dibaltum they A Roman fell upon Barzimeres, Tribune of the Scutarii, who Legion cut was encamp'd there with his own Legion, and feve- ". ralother Parties of Foot, Barzimeres was an old experienc'd Commander, and knew well enough the Danger he was in, and therefore drawing his Men up into a close Body, he endeavour'd to force his Way through the Enemies Squadrons, and maintain'd the Fight fo long that he destroy'd a great Number of the Barbarians, but was at length over power'd with fresh Supplies, and cut in pieces together with the whole Party. Animated by this Advantage, which had cost 'em very dear, they went in quest of Frigeride, who was now come by the Emperor's Order into Thrace, and was polled near Berea. He was too cautious to hazard his Army gainst an Enemy that exceeded him so much in Numbers of Men, and therefore drew over the Mountains into Illyricum; but in his Retreat met with an Adventure with which he was much eleva-He fell in with Farnobins, one of the Gothick

the

rige. time

but

wert

rted

ach-

osd:

Tre

feiz'd

ave it

if out

aftet

Richo

defeated.

A Party of Captains, who was at the Head of a confidently the Goths Body of Troops, whom he engag'd and defeated killing the Commander upon the Spot, together with the rest of his Army, except some who crash our for Quarter; them in Pity he spar'd, disposing of em about Mutina Rhegium, and Parma in Italy where they were employ'd in the Tillage of the we work to proper an Ground.

A. D. 378.

Whilst Thrace was thus cruelly infested by the Goths, other Parts of the Empire labour'd under the fame Calamities; for the whole Body of the Gr man Nation, knowing the greatest Part of the Imperial Forces were march'd into Illyricum, whither the Emperor Gratian was preparing to follow, they to the Number of forty thousand, or upwards pass'd over the Rhine upon the Ice, and broke into the Borders of Ganl. Gratian hereupon recall'd the Troops he had order'd to march into Pannonia, and at Argentaria, call'd at present Colman in Allen gave the Germans for entire a Defeat, that not above five thousand escap'd; among the rest, Priarius of Priamus, their King, the chief Promoter of the Win are defeated.

The Germans up in Arms,

was flain. Gratian was highly pleas'd with this Success which redounded much to his Reputation; and nov his Thoughts were bent towards the East, whither he was refolv'd to march in Person to the A stelland of his Uncle Valens: But that he might leave no Enemy, capable of making any Disturbance in his Absence, behind him, he had a mind first to punish the Lentienfes, a People of Germany bordering upon Rhatia, who broke the League, and gave a Begi ning to the late War. He therefore march'd his Ar my over the Rhine with all the Secrefie imaginable intending by Surprize if possible to conquer, or ex tirpate fo inconstant and faithless a People. Th Lentienses, being inform'd of his sudden Approach

t

I

a

W

t

th

to

th

Gr

fco

he

ped

nati

the

felv

Pare

they

the

fteri

now Exp

late . gain'

nage

Elog

H

his N

Laur

of his was be

tion, of the

Chap. H. XLW Vale Gratian, Valenti. II. 177

were in a great Confernation what to do; after a shore Deliberation they remov'd with their Families, and whatever elfe they could bear off with them, into the Mountains, where they foreify'd themselves with great Precipitation, resolving to make good the Place at the Hazard of their Lives. Hither Gratian follow'd 'em, and finding upon Trial that they were not easily to be remov'd, he block'd 'em up, and fo refolv'd by degrees to flarve 'em. Of this the Germans were quickly fentible, and therefore they broke up without much Concern, and remov'd to other Mountains, higher and more inaccessible than the former. They were no fooner gone, but Gratian mov'd after 'em, and endeavouring to discover the Passes that led to the Top of the Hills, he gave em to understand what they were to expect from him. They imagin'd by this his obstinate Resolution, that nothing would fatisfie him but their Destruction; whereupon they surrender'd themfelves, and in a very fubmiffive manner begg'd his Pardon, which was granted them upon Condition they deliver'd up their Youth, who ferv'd to recruit the Roman Army. By this last Advantage the Weftern Nations were restrain'd for the present, and now Gratian was at leifure to purfue his intended Expedition into the East, whither the Fame of his late Exploits had flown before him. He had indeed gain'd much upon his Subjects by his generous Carnage, being a Youth of great Hopes, well dispos'd, Eloquent, Courteous, and Liberal.

of ally,

24 the

the

Ger.

Im-

ther

hey,

ards, into

tche

lfact.

boyt 10 (22)

War

DE !

coels, nov

rither

ftance

VE N

m hi

unith

upor Begin

is Al

inable

or ex Th

prosel

WEI

Having fettled all his Affairs in Gand, he began his March, and mov'd with great Expedition by begins his Lauriacum, call'd at present Lork, to the Assistance Marchineo of his Uncle. In the mean time, whilft Frigeride the East. was behaving himself with great Prudence and Caution, and fortifying the Straights of Succi, a Place of the greatest Importance, he was unaccountably difmifs'd

dismis'd from his Employment, at a season whe fuch a Man ought to have been courted to the vice, and been entrusted in the highest Comme This was a great loss to the Army, and was ag vated by the Inabilities of Maurus who succeeded him, being a Man of a quite contrary Temper, raft, fullen, and inconstant.

Valens was by this time arriv'd at Constantino where he discharg'd Trajan from any farther Service, and made Sebastian General of the Foot. He was a brave experienc'd Commander, bred up in the Army, to which his Inclinations led him, from his Youth; and was now detach'd by the Emperor with a good Body of Forces under his Command against the Barbarians, lying then with a great Booty about Berea and Nicopolis. At Adrianople he refresh'd his Men, and iffuing out the next Day, he fell undifcover'd upon a Party of the Goths, who without any apprehensions of an Enemy were roving about if River Hebrus, whom in great Numbers he kill'd, and recover'd their Plunder. Fritigern was much perplex'd at this unexpected Defeat, and fearing left the rest of his Countrymen, roving about the Country, should fall into Sebastian's Hands, he gave 'em Or ders to join him with all speed, and march'd towards the Coasts of Cabyle. During these Occurrences in Thrace, Gracian had inform'd his Uncle of the Success of his Arms against the Germans, and was by this time come to Sirni-um, where he stay'd four Days to refresh his Army, and then proceeded along the Danube to a Fort eall'd Castra Martis, having in his March lost for of his Men through the fudden Incursions of the Barbarians, and being himself afflicted all the while by an Ague.

Valens by this time began to think his own Reputation eclips'd by that of his young Nephew, and there

W

ea

h

W

de

in

OU

th

ani

me

the

M

to

able

all

an

pref

ing figh

him

phez

and

the

to I

ver'

cers

Schaftian defeats a Party of the Goths.

Chap. II. XLV. Vale. Gratian, Valenti. II. 179

therefore refolv'd to do fomething that might equal his Exploits against the Germans. This Emulation. had it been rightly conceiv'd, might have been of great Use to the publick Affairs, but it made Valens hafty and ungovernable, and thereby haften'd his Destruction. He desir'd to enjoy without a Rival the Glory of a Victory, which he could not obtain without an Affiffant. Marching therefore from Melanthias, an Imperial Town, he encamped with his Army near Adrianople, where he was preferred with Letters from his Nephew Gration, in which he earnestly pressed him not to hazard a Battel 'till he had join'd him, nor make that Victory doubtful which the Conjunction of their Forces would render indisputable. In a Council of War, which was immediately call'd, forme advis dhim to fight with out delay, amongst whom was Sebastian, General of the Foot, but Victor, who commanded the Horfes and was a wary prudent Officer, advis'd him by all means to flay for his Collegue, and the Accession of the Gallick Troops, which would make him an equal Match for the Enemy.

the

his

his di-

200

Der-

t she

ntry,

Or

rards

Port

fome

f che

n.Ro

200

there

Some fay Pringers at the same time sollicited him to a Peace, offering to accept of it upon very reasonable Conditions, which his Officers advised him by all means to embrace; remonstrating to him, that an honourable and certain Peace was always to be preferred to an uncertain Victory. Notwithstanding all which Considerations he was obtained to fight, persuaded to it by his Flatterers, who told him he would thereby prevent that Honour his Asphew would share with him in the Engagement, and wear the Laurel alone. So that having sent all the Baggage into Advianople, he ordered the Army to march, and about Noon the Beemy was discovered preparing to fight; hereupon the Roman Officers drew up their Army in Order of Battel. Some

E

T

H

CT

po

De

for

felv

Pro

ind

not

of

the

lay

rolli

only

mea

both

deac

ons

and.

ing.

who

coul

my,

they

ly fo

Safraces sent to the Emperor, and pretended to defire Peace: He receiv'd 'em with much Indignation, requiring the chiefest among 'em to be delivered up as Hostages; but they protracted the Time as long as they could 'till their Horse was arriv'd, which they hourly expected; besides, they design'd by their Delay to tire out the Romans with the Heat of the Season, which was very much increas'd by the multitudes of Fires they had for that purpose kindled throughout the Country.

In the mean time Fritigern, farther to amuse the Emperor, promis'd by a Mellenger to bring all his Forces over to him, together with Necellaries for the Army, of which they then flood in great need, but requir'd that some Noblemen might be sent as Hostages to him. The Message was very acceptable to Valens, who propos'd Equitius, a Tribune and his own Relation, to be one of the Hostages; but he refus'd the Employment, having experienc'd the Severity of the Barbarians when detain'd Prifener among 'em, from whom he lately made his Escape. Upon this Richomeres, like a Man of Courage and Resolution, voluntarily offer'd himself to go; but as they were conducting him to the Enemies Camp, a Party of Archers and others, under the Command of Bacurius an Iberian and one Callie, impatient to be in Action, fell upon the Goths, and gave an unlucky Beginning to the War: For by this means Richomeres his Delign was frustrated, and the Go thick Horse having join'd the rest of the Army, they came rolling like a Torrent down the Mountains, and with an impetuous Force overwhelm'd all that flood in their way. The Romans were everpower'd at the first Onset, and fell in great Numbers, however they made a very vigorous Refistance, and were refolv'd to fell their Lives at as dear a rate as they

Chap.II. XLV. Vale: Gratian, Valenti.II. 181

they could; never was Battel fought with more obstinate Resolution, where Death, like a raging irrefistible Flame, first caught hold on those who turn'd it loofe, and then enlarg'd and extended it felf on every fide with implacable Fury. The Left Wing of the Roman Army piere'd through to the Enemy's Carriages, and had undoubtedly done great Execution had they been supported by fresh Troops; but being deferted by the rest of the Horse, who were broken at the first Shock, the Barbarians fell like a mighty Tower upon em, and crush'd 'em in a moment; by this means the Foot were left naked, and expos'd to the Enemies Weapons, who furrounding 'em on every fide did very great Execution. The Romans fought like Men in Despair, and seem'd to contemn that Death they found unavoidable; the Barbarians behav'd themselves with equal Bravery, encourag'd with the Prospect of a Victory which they began to think indisputable. They ow'd the Fortune of the Day not so much to their own Valour, as the Advantage of their Numbers, which made 'em infemible of the Lofs of Multitudes of their Countrymen, who lay scatter'd o'er the Field, gnawing the Earth, and rolling their Eyes in Death, which for that Reason only was unwelcome, because it took from em the means of Revenge. Through this Obstinacy on both Sides the Plain became cover'd with Heaps of dead Bodies, and the heavy Groans and Lamentations of them that were dying silenc'd the Shouts and Acclamations of those who still continu'd fighting. After the Roman Foot had done all that Men, ' The Rowhose Native Courage was embolden'd by Despair, man Army could pretend to do, and had refifted an Ene- defeated. my, 'till at last they found him to be irrelistible, they betook themselves to Flight, but were closely follow'd by the Barbarians, who appear'd as the your man man more de 45

but

the

ilo-

his

ou-

10

ne-

der

Sio,

ave

60

INS

that

OWers,

and

C 25

hey

th

21

an

W

A

fti

V

R

pe

int

wit

COT

ffra

dec

Ma

the

wh

dox

Arn

as T

ers,

the d

Was

man

his e

Mer

thro

happ

fixth

Valer

and]

um

T

V

obstanate in the Pursuit as they had been before the Fight, sparing none that yielded, but quitte all those that made Resistance. On the one tide t Romans were hinder'd in the Flight by Multis of dead Bodies filling up the Ways, on the ther they were favour'd by the Darkness of Night which now was coming on upon When the Emperor perceived to which fide Fortune of the Day inclin'd, and that the Rel of his Army were quitting the Field to his Vid rious Enemy, he fled in great Consternation to Lancearii, who had hitherto stood the Shock out giving the least Ground; which Trajan, was lately reftor'd to a Command in the A observing, he cry'd out, That the Emperor, defe by his Guards, would unavoidably be lost until was instantly rescuid; whereupon Victor went haste for a Body of Batavians, who had been plac'd as a Referve for the Relief of the Prince but by this time were either flain or fled. Thus Valens was left expos'd to the Fury of the Ene my, forfaken rather by Fortune, than deferted by his Soldiers, whom the Barbarians over-power'd rether than conquer'd. Those Officers that were left about him press'd him earnestly to fly for his Sale ty, and referve himfelf for better Times, and the good of the Common-wealth, having provided his with Horses accordingly, that would convey his speedily out of Danger; But he thought it be neath his Dignity to out-live fo great a Lofs, and therefore was flain by the Barbarians, together with feveral of his Followers, who in Heaps fell o'er him, covering his Body instead of a Monument. This Account of his Death we have from Ammiron and Libanius in his Oration to Thredofins; tho other Historians affirm he did not die upon the spot, but being wounded in the Field fled with some of his Fol-

Valens

Followers to a Countryman's House hard by, which they made good for some time against the Barbarians, who, ignorant of the Quality of the Perfort and more intent upon the Profpect of a greater Booty, fet Fire to the House, in the Flames of which the unhappy Emperor was confum'd. All Authors agree he ow'd his Ruin to his own Obstinacy, engaging with the Enemy in Envy to the Virtues of his Nephew Gratian, contrary to the Rules of Prudence, and the Advice of his most experienc'd Captains. Some fay he receiv'd the Goths into the Roman Pale out of a Difgust to Gratian, who, when Valentinian had been chosen Emperor without acquainting either of them with it, had confirm'd the Election without his Advice, and shar'd the Empire with him; to this may be added, the Difagreement that was between em in Matters relating to Religion; for Valens had from the beginning openly espous'd the Arian Party, whereas Gratian was a great Favourer of the Orthodox Professors.

With the Emperor fell near two Thirds of the Army, and among 'em several Eminent Persons, such as Trajan and Sebastian, two Principal Commanders, Valerian and Equitions, one Master of the Horse, the other great Steward of the Houshold, tho none was more lamented than Potentius, a young Sentleman of extraordinary Hopes, highly esteemed for his own Merits, and reverenced in Honour to the Memory of his Father Ursicious. This great Overthrow, said to be equaled by none but that of Camas, happened on the oth of Angust, A.D. 378s in the sixth Consultation of Valens and of Valentinian, after Valens had reigned fourteen Years and four Months, and had lived near fifty.

by

10 left

Safe.

the

him him

bb

and

him, This

f his

The Character Heathen Authors have left us of His Chakim is agreeable to what we have already related ratter.

N 4 col

Judgment from Heav'n for the many Perfecution he had rais'd against the Faithful, and the great Encouragement he gave to that abominable Herefie of Arius, which flourish'd and encreas'd more in his Reign than under any of his Predecessors. In fome respects he was like his Brother, for he was very cautious of preferring his Relations, and a rigorous Exacter both of Civil and Military Difcipline. He was likewise a watchful Guardian of the Provinces, to whom he was as affections his Care, as he could be to his own Family. had one very commendable Quality, for he never conferr'd an Estate upon his begging Courtiers before he who had a Title to it had time allowed him to plead his Right, and defend himself; and whenever upon Trial it appear'd he might lawfully dispose of it, he never gave it all to him that begg'd it, but made him share it with some others that were absent, and by such Disappointments check'd the Importunity of those who stood watching for other Mens Wealth; tho' he himfelf was for intemperately covetous of Riches, that his rigorous and almost daily Confiscations made his Government intolerable. He was of a clownish surly Temper, which in a great measure may be charg'd upon his want of Education, being brought up in his Youth neither to the Study of Arms, nor the liberal Sciences. He was so jealous of his Authority, that the least Suspicion of Treason made him cruel and incam Han exorable, and his Ears were open continually to be a all manner of Accusations, which gain'd him but a few Friends, tho' where-ever he profes'd a Friendcher they thip himself he was firm and faithful. His want of Breeding made him Rude and Abusive, his Jealigns lousie made him Cholerick and Partial, and his want concerning him; but Enclesiastical Writers are more severe against him, and term his Death a just

(

0 tl

in

b

10

W

th

W T

a l pie

hac

Vi

of der

the

wh rag'

an .

Adı fet (

the

Bari

and

Chapill, XLVI. Gratian, Valentinian II. 185 of Merit Envious and Detracting; the last of which, the most unbecoming a Prince, threw him upon imprudent Courses, and, as we observ'd before, brought him to an untimely End.

Middle about the

II. The Day after the Fight the Goths, inform'd The Goths by some Fugitives that Valens had left many Per- besiege Afons of Quality behind in Adrianople, where like-drianople. wife the Imperial Treasure was lodg'd, march'd with great Expedition thither, and laid Siege to the City, by which means they prevented several, who had escap'd the Battel, from getting into the Town; whereupon three hundred of em went in a Body over to the Barbarians, who cut 'em all in pieces, and by that imprudent Severity prevented the like Treachery for the future. After they had for feveral times affaulted the Town with much Vigour, and were as vigoroully repuls'd by the Inhabitants, they at first endeavour'd by Letters full of Threats to perfuade the Defendants to furrender, who answer'd em with much Indignation; then they attempted to feize on that by Fraud, which they could not obtain by Force, and encourag'd certain Fugitives to pretend they had made an Escape from the Besiegers, and thereby gain Admittance into the Town, which they were to fet on Fire in some convenient Place; which whilft the Defendants were bufie in extinguishing, the Barbarians might scale the Walls with greater Ease, and so become Masters of the Place. These Fugitives came accordingly to the Trenches, where with their Hands stretch'd out, they defir'd of the Romans to be admitted, who without Suspicion of any Treachery open'd the Gate and took 'em in; but when they came to be examin'd about the Enemy's Deligns they disagreed in their Answers, which made em fuspected; and being put to the Rack they

6

S

con-

re

tu

fer

the

and M

Ch

Ho

Par to in i

iffu wei

tim

we

one

a gi ove

an h killi

and thin

the '

ans ' that

Affa

Obf

Strei

habi

Nor

more

temp Cou

their er re

cles

confes'd the whole Matter, and lost their Heads their Treason. The Geths being by this Dife ry deceiv'd of their Expectation, renew'd the Attack with Minds harden'd against Death and Danger, thinking by the Superiority of Numbers to do the Bufiness; but in this the Romans had the Advantage, that whatever they discharg'd at em did They raise some Execution. This Atrack was shortly after, the Siege,

at the Instigation of their Officers, seconded by nother, which they carry'd on with equal Obitinacy, but were again repuls'd by the Romans, and forc'd to retire towards the Evening with great Los fretting at their Success, and upbraiding each other for acting contrary to Fritigern's Advice, who by all Motives defir'd them to avoid Sieges; fo that they

to Perinthus;

and march broke up the next Day, and march'd towards Peris thus, which they resolv'd to feize; but still feeling the rough Entertainment they met with before Adrianople, they had not the Courage to approach the Walls, but wasted that fertile Country on every fide; and fo dividing the Army into four Bodies, for fear of a Surprize, they mov'd towards from thence Constantinople, promising themselves nothing les tinople,

to Constan- than the Possession of the great Wealth they knew to be in that City.

> Some time before the Death of Valens, the Saracens in the East, encourag'd perhaps by the Success the Goths met with in Thrace, in Defiance of a Truce concluded between the Emperor and their Prince, who was lately dead, by which means the Truce was expired, rofe up in Arms, and under the Conduct of Mavia, Widow to the decease, Woman of Masculine Courage, surprized the Towns fituate on the Frontiers of Palestine and Araba, and in several Encounters worsted the Roman Army, and thereby oblig'd the Emperor to grant em an Honourable Peace; one of the Principal Arti cles of which was, that the Queen, who had lately receiv'd the Light of the Cofpel, might have a certain Hermit call'd Mofey renown'd for his Virtues, and the Miracles God wrought by his Hands, fent to her to convert and instruct her Subjects in the fame Religion. Mojes was fent accordingly, and was to fuccessful in his Million, that great Multitudes of People, who never before heard of Christianity or the Gospel, were enlighten'd by the Holy Ghoft, and embrac'd the Faith. A great Party from this Nation were now fent by the Queen to defend Constantinople, and being more dextrous in fudden Onfets than regular Engagements, they iffu'd out, and fell fuddenly upon the Gorbs as they were facing the City. After a hot Dispute for some time they parted upon equal Terms, tho' the Goths were much terrify'd at an Action they observ'd in one of the Saracens. A Man whofe Hair hung in A frange a great length behind him, and who was naked all Action of a over his Body except his Privy Parts, ran with Saracen. an hideous Noise into the midst of the Goths, and killing one of 'em, let his Mouth to the Wound and fuck'd his Blood; tho' this was a customary thing with them of that Nation, as appears from the Testimony of Several Authors, yet the Barbarians were fo furpriz'd at fuch a prodigious Action, that they began to reflect on the Posture of their Affairs, and march'd with more Circumspection, Observing the large Compass of the Walls, the Strength of the Place, and great Numbers of its Inhabitants, they decamp'd in the Night, and march'd Northward as far as the Julian Alps; having loft more Men than they destroy'd in this bold Attempt, which prov'd more Fatal to some of their Countrymen than chemicives; for the Noise of their Devastations throughout Thrace were no foontr reported in the East, but all the Provinces were

h

0-ds efs

63

IC-

of eir

he

the

sla

YTIS Mi,

em

rti

cles

in

fe

0

T

hi

Pu

gu

VCC

Ea

ent

a n

pro

Wr

afte

clar F

the that

fide

very

takin

in A

in Ga

who Partn

monii

in a S

Tolv'd

Theod

great

rcuse than

fill pe

in a great Consternation, expecting the Storm would presently be at their own Doors, by reason of the great Multitudes of Gaths which were then quarter'd in the feveral Forts and Cities of those Parts the Sword in the East.

tho' under the Command of Roman Officers, who they made no doubt would readily rife and join with their Countrymen, should they in the Course of their Rovings move that way; but Fulins, who commanded in the East as General of the Roman Armies, enter'd upon a safe and wholsome, but a fevere and bloody Course, to prevent any Danger All the that might arise from 'em. By Letters sent secret-Goths, put ly to their Officers, he order'd 'em all to be drawn out in the Fields adjoining to their respective Quarters at one and the same time, under a Pretence of receiving their Pay, and to be all put to the Sword. This prudent Counsel was put in Execution with out any Noise or Delay, and the Eastern Provinces were thereby deliver'd from those great Dangers they had just reason to apprehend. Gratian being inform'd of his Uncle's Death, and the great Los the Romans had fustain'd in the late Battel, went presently to Sirmium, there to take such Measures, and follow such Councils as the Necessity of his Affairs suggested to him; and being join'd by all the Forces he could raife, he march'd through Pannonia, Mysia, and Thrace, and arriv'd at Constantinople, where considering with himself how many brave Officers the present War had destroy'd, and how much he stood in need of an able and faithful General, he pitch'd upon Theodofius, the Son of him who commanded with fo much Success first here in Britain, and afterwards in Africk He was a Person of great Abilities in Matters relating to the War, and no less capable of managing State Affairs, and governing in Times of Peace, of all which he had given extraordinary Proofs, tho upon

Chap.II.XLVI. Grat. Val.II. Theodosius. 189

upon the Account of some Faction in Spain, his own Country, he was at present laid aside, and led a private retir'd Life. Him Gratian immediately sent for, and in the mean time nam'd Ausonius and Olybrius Consuls for the Year ensuing. Ausonius was a Native of Burdeaux, had been the Emperor's Tutor, and was one of the most samous Poets of his Time; tho' he fell short of that Beauty and Purity in his Writings, which so evidently distinguish those of the Augustean Age.

0

n

411

19

et-

WD

11-

of

rd.

ces

gers

Loss

vent

res,

his

y all

ugh

Con-

how by'd,

and

the

Suc-

frick. rela-

aging

ce, of

upon

Theodosius, in Obedience to the Emperor, arrived at Court, and had Orders to command in the East; and some say, that he immediately thereupon enter'd into Action with the Barbarians, and obtain'd a memorable Victory over 'em: This is not very probable, if we consider the Silence of the ancient Writers in this Particular, and that within a Month Theodoafter, being with Gratian at Sirmium, he was de- $105.

dar'd by him his Collegue in the Empire.

For Gratian observing the Necellities to which the State was reduc'd, and the imminent Dangers that threaten'd the Empire, how the Goths on one fide continu'd to infest it, and were raging in the very Bowels of it; how on the other the Germans, taking the advantage of his Absence, were again up in Arms, and were making Work enough for him in Gaul, he willingly inclin'd to the Advice of those who perfuaded him to admit of Theodofins for his Partner in the Supream Power. Whereupon fummoning the Nobility together, he address'd himself in a Speech to Theodofius, and told him he had reolv'd to commit the Care of the East to his Charge. Theodosius thank'd him, in a modelt Answer, for the great Honour he intended him, but endeavour'd to acuse himself, declaring the Burden to be greater han he was able to undergo. However Gratian till perfifted in his Defign, and fo Theodofins was declared

A. D.

declar'd Emperor on the 16th of January, whenhe was thirty three Years old, A. D. 379. Assoning

te

fo

T

an

In

'er

A

fro

Co

the

for

W

hea

han

to c

and

of th

that der'e

their

ber o

and v

was I em a

us Th

which

not to

WLW

Worth

for he

ug th

y of

379. and Olibrius being Confuls.

After Gratian had taken this Order for the Set. tlement and Security of the East, he lest Sirming in order to return to Gaul, into which he heard the Germans, having broken through the Borders, were lately fallen. He march'd therefore towards it with all Expedition, and at Milan publishes an Edic. forbidding any under the feverest Penalties to harbour of conceal those who deserted their Colours, a thing at that time very much in practice. From Milan he proceeded on his Progress through Rhtia, and visited the Sequani and Germania Prima and by little more than his Appearance in those Parts restrain'd the Motions of the Germans, and setting the Affairs of that Country he returned to Thei, having much about this time iffu'd our another Edict, forbidding Hereticks to form any publick Assemblies throughout the Empire.

Gratian being departed from Sirmium, Theodofin remov'd to The falonica, where he gain'd very much upon the Minds of the People, through the case Access to his Person, and his obliging Carriage to those who had any Business with him, relating elther to the Publick, or their own private Concerns. Here he began his first Preparations against the Golds, who having in fresh Numbers pass'd the Ister grev very burdenfome to the Provinces. They were grown fo numerous in Thrace, all which they had by this time over-run, that the Roman Forces dipofed in Garrifons thoughout the Country, dar'd not fo much as look abroad, much less to come to any Engagement in the open Field. Here our bell Guide, Ammianus, has left us, who concluded his History presently after the Death of Valens; and o ther Authors, who wrote of the Actions performed against

Chap. II. XLVI, Gran. Val. II. Theodosius. 191

against the Barbarians, are so inconsistent with each other, fo obscure in their Accounts, and frequently fo contradictory to themselves, that a Writer ought to be very cautious of what he relates upon their Authority. Some fay Theodofins march'd in Perfon against them, fought them, and gave them a total Defeat. Others, that whilst he continu'd at The falonica, one Modares, a Man of Royal Birth among the Scythians, having embrac'd the Roman Interest, and perform'd some fignal Services under 'em, was preferr'd to a confiderable Command in the Army. That he leading his Men up to a Hill, from whence he had a fair Prospect of the adjacent Country, discover'd the Barbarians, who had abus'd the Advantages the fruitful Plains afforded, and were for the most part overcome with Excels of Wine. Whereupon he order'd his Troops to leave their heavy Armour behind, and with their Swords in hand fall upon them who were by this time unable to defend themselves. This was speedily executed, and the Rarbarians were put all to the Sword, many of them dying without being fenfible who they were that hurt them. In their Camp, which they plunder'd, they found four thousand Waggons full of their Wives and Children, with an answerable number of Slaves, befides feveral who follow'd on Foot, and were to ride when their Turns came, for there was not room fufficient in their Carriages to receive em all at once. And in this manner Zozimus tells is Thrace was preferv'd from an approaching Ruin, which he attributes to the Conduct of Modares, and not to the Prudence and Circumspection of Theodohu, who, if we may believe him, behaved himfelf unworthy the high Dignity to which he was advanc'd; or he inveighs against him in Terms better becoming the Virulence of a Declaimer, than the Integriy of an Historian. But as he appears grofly parti-

h

9,

rrs,

m

1

14,

ing ers,

her

lick

ofine

ruch

alie

e to

g ei-

erns.

oths,

Siem

had

ilpo-

d not

o any

- belt

d his ind o orm'd gainst al in many other Paffages of his Hiftory, f Provin often 1 gave a pparer their F roid, y which

th

75

th

and

the

La

fam

fade

upo

reap

enor

tron

affur

both

been

Recr

he ca

Judg

Prato

the N

he re

and fu

Court

Men's

no less to be suspected in this; for besides that not able to conceal the Rancor of his Heart his Zeal for the Pagan Worship, several made by Theodofius at that time, especially for lating to the Army, wipe off those Aspersio has flung at random upon him, and argue his void of good Manners as of Judgment. To which we may add, that in those things for w he reprehends and taxes Theodofius, few or no of Writers agree with him; but where he condefee to make him fome Allowances due to his Prud and Success, he therein concurs with the rest of Authors, who have written of those Times, wh ther Christian or Heathen. He confesses that his generous Behaviour and Magnificence towards narich, a Scythian Prince we had occasion on before, wrought fo much upon the Scylings attended him to Constantinople, that they return'd home, in high Admiration of Theodosius his Goodness, and resolv'd no more to molest the Roman; and some who staid behind undertook to defend the Bank of the River, and freed the Roman Territorie from any Incursions for a long time after. He tells us he overthrew the Scyri and Carpadoca, who had join'd themselves with the Hunns, and compell'd em to return home; that by this, and some other fi cessful Exploits, the Soldiers began to re-assume th former Courage, and breath with new Hopes, not withstanding the many Difficulties which for a lo time had lain heavy upon the Empire, which feen now by Theodofius his Vigilance to be recover'd from its former Diftempers. This Account of Theodofus his Success is no more than what is attested by feveral other Writers, who agree with him in hi Commendations of Theodofius his Clemency and in gular good Nature; by the Force and Efficacy of which Weapon, more prevalent than his Garrisons, Legions and Cohorts, saith Themistius, he extinguish'd the Scythian Flame, thought thad for a long time rag'd with a resistless Fury throughout Thrace, which groun'd with the Weight of the Barbarians that rush d in upon it, whilst the Banks of the Dambe vomited forth Battels that hid whole Provinces waste in a Moment. Orosius writes further, that all the Nations of the Goths, charm'd with the Virtue and Mildness of Theodosius, renounced all farther thoughts of War, and submitted themselves to the Laws of the Roman Empire: Adding, that at the same time the Persians voluntarily sent their Ambasadors to Constantinople, to sollicit a Peace, whereupon a League was concluded, of which all the Eastreap'd the Benefit for a long time after.

od-

the ries calls had hen not long emile definition in

Tho' Zozimus charges this Emperor with many enormous Corruptions, which he fuffer'd to be intromitted into his Court and his Camp, yet we are assur'd that he effected a thorough Reformation in both. He put a stop to the ill Practices that had been us'd for a long time in raising the Tirones, or Recruits for the Army; publish'd a Law, which he caus'd exactly to be observ'd, against corrupt Judges; enlarg'd the Authority of the Profession Pretorio, who had thereby a full Power to punish the Mildemeanours of Governors in the Provinces; he restrain'd the unlimited Licence of Informers, and fufficiently discouraged a great Vice, natural to Courtiers in almost all Reigns, that of begging Men's Effates; and whereas some Governors of Provinces, by a shameful Abuse of their Power, often terrify'd Men into Donations, wherein they give a great Part of their Estates to them, to the pparent Prejudice, and fometimes utter Ruin of their Families, he declar'd all such Donations to be loid, whether made to the Governors themselves, or any of their Relations; he reform'd feveral At fes too much practised by the Receivers of the Res venue, which were thereby improv'd to a w great degree; and by a very wholfome Law dain'd, that those who had been Governors of Pr vinces, Gould, after the time of their Government was expired, remain in the respective Province for two or three Months, there to answer whatever the Provincials could affedge against 'em in reference to their Male-Administration, and made 'em r ble not only for whatever Injuries they I themselves, but for the Insolences commerced by their inferior Officers. One Natalis, who had formerly commanded in Sardinia, gave occasion to this Law: He, in the former Reign, had cruelly oppress'd the Inhabitants of that Province, and got out of their Power, before they had time to plain to those who had the proper Cognizance but Theodofius fert him back into the Island, and subjected him to the Inquisition of the Law, and, to prevent the like Oppressions for the future, publish'd the foremention'd Edict.

These Laws and Ordinances sufficiently clear him from the Imputation of that heavy Charge Zozimu has brought against him, whose greatest Quarre to him was that he was a Christian, in the Purity of which Faith he perfifted, at a time when Church was almost rent in pieces by inou Herefies and Schisms. One Maximus, al losopher, had lately embrac'd Christianity Defence of which he writ with much Spirit and Judgment, both against the Arians and Heathers for which in Valens his Reign he had fuffer'd much Persecution, and was banish'd into the Desart of 0-

Commoti- afis. He was now return'd to Conflantinople, and ons at Con- was recommended by Peter of Alexandria to Gre flantinople gory Nazianzen, whom the People of the City had

electe

e

71

0

P

2 tec imi

Qu

the rest

fho

WIT.

mor

time to r

Ben lhop

rection Const

ing t ry's I

ded a

forc'c antw!

Defin

off N

after i

firm'd

at this

Prelat

who r duc'd ces, at hence .

elected for their Bishop, into which Office the was own Faction. Gregory receive Meximus with much Tenderness, and recommended him to the People, as one whom Jesus Christ and thought work the to suffer for his Name Sake, and little thought a Man of his exemplary Santog should be animated with the Spirit of Pride and Ambrion. Maximus had, either by the Appearance of his good Qualities, or his Promifes and Prefence, fo far gain'd the Good-will of Beter, Bishop of Alexandria, that he refolv'd blindly to espouse and favour his Interest: Accordingly he dispatch'd seven On hodox Bishops to Constantinople, whom St. Gregory entertain'd with much Civility, and commended tem in his Serv mons as Prelarestruly zealous for the Faith. Some time after an Indisposition of Heat h oblig'd him to retire into the Country for a few Days, for the Benefic of the Air; and in his Absence these Bishops got by Night into the Church of the Referrection, where they ordain'd Manager Bishop of Constantinople in the room of Gregory. In the Morning the People and the Priests, who were of Gregory's Party, and even the Arians themselves, offended at so bold an Attempt, came in a great Body and forc'd Maximus and his Ordainers out of the Church; ntwithstanding which they persisted still in their Defign, and getting into a private House they cut off Maximus his Hair, which he wore very long. after the Mode of the Craic Philosophers, and confirm'd him Bishop. The People were so provok'd a this their Obstinacy, that they chac'd the new Prelate out of the City, and fent for St. Gregory; who returning, convinc'd some who had been induc'd to adhere to Maximus, of his finister Practies, and composed the Minds of the People. From hence we may learn, that the Life and Nature of Chri-

d,

188 10

中国

and

ens,

uch

FO. and

Gre had ace

(

P

tl

1

CE

25

87

G

th

CO

Do

ftr:

der

mu

gail

of i

felf

the

San

very

the

for

Chie

Opi

latry

coun

then

he in their

at git

form'

King,

The

the P

others

Coun

6

Christianity does not confish in an outward Profe fion of it, however formal and zealous, but in inward Purity of the Mind, which none can con terfeit, and is the immediate Gift of God The Practices at Constantinople, and some fresh Attemp of the Arians, caus'd Theodofus to fummon the cond General or Occumenical Council, which was celebrated in that City by 150 Orthodox Bishops

ARCADIUS declared Angustus, A. D.

383.

Some time after this Theodofins advanc d his So Arcadius, whom he had by the Empress to the Imperial Dignity. This Ceremony form'd on the roth of January, Arcadius being ther fix, or as some will have it eight Years of Age After he had made him Emperor, his first Con was to give him an Education proper for a Person that was to move in so high a Sphere, and to purpose desir'd Gratian by Letters to send him for pious and learned Man, whom he thought fit for great an Undertaking. Hereupon Gratian, at the Recommendation of Damasus, Bishop of Rome, made choice of Arsenius, a Deacon of the Roman Church, a Person eminent for Piety and Learning.

Upon his Arrival at Constantinople the Emperor refign'd up his Sons, together with Nebridius their Coufin-German, to his Care, telling him That for the future he should look on him as their Father more than himself: Implying by it, that he desir'd him to use the same Authority over, and Affection wards 'em, as a Father doth to his Children that he expected his Sons should pay him a Respect equal to that which is due to a Parent. Accordingly coming one Day into the School he found dr. Senius standing, and Arcadius, whom he was instructing, sitting down, at which Sight he wasangry, and reprehended Arsenius for not preserving the Dignity of his Office. To this Arsenius reply'd, That it by no means became him to fit in the Presence of an Emperor; upon which Theodosius took the Diadem from off Arcadius his Head, and made Arsenius fit down while the young Emperor ceiv'd his Instructions standing, and bare-headed as a Scholar ought; adding, That his Son would be unworthy the Empire, if to Knowledge he did not add Goodness and the Fear of God. Jesius omitted nothing requifite to the informing a Prince, in whose Education a great part of Mankind was fo nearly concern'd; but he found his Scholar was not fo Docile and Tractable as he defir'd, for being constrain'd to chastise him one Day for a very considerable Fault, he receiv'd his Correction with fo much Indignation, that he immediately plotted as gainst his Master's Life. Arsenius being inform'd of it retir'd secretly from Court, and join'd himself to some Anchorers in Egypt, where he liv'd all the rest of his Days, and dy'd Famous for his Sanctity.

Pre-

Gratian had upon all Occasions show'd himself very averse to the Heathen Superstitions, depriving the Priests of the Revenue that had been affign'd for their Subsistance. He refus'd the Title of Chief-Priest, which had been offer'd him, being of Opinion it savour'd too much of the ancient Idelatry; thefe, and other Provocations, upon the account of Religion, render'd him odious to the Heathens, whose manner of Worship they were afraid he intended to extirpate; and this made 'em call their Eyes upon Maximus, who was then aiming Maximus it great things here in Britain, where he had per- Ulurps. form'd many brave Exploits against the Scots, whose king, Eugenius, he defeated and kill'd in Battel. The Writers of those Times are not agreed upon the Place of his Birth; fome lay he was a Spaniard, others that he was Born in this Island; but of what Country foever he was, he gave out that he was

de

b.

10

eir

or.

re

in condition

ng-

1r+

n-

an-

og

te-

the

re-

descended

W

th

N

W H

m M

Li

E

rea

for Lif

cer

the

gath

liv'

Was Wr

men

that

that

Parc

The

Field in th

pire;

want reaso

in hi

Expl

his E

dofins

the E

his (tain'd

dict t

Chris

descended from Constanting the Great, and according to call'd himself Fl. Clemens Maximus; and the better to ingratiate himself with the Soldiers, pretended that he was join'd in Affinity with Theo fus, with whose Participation and Consent h thus fet up for himself. Gratian at fielt de him as a mean Man, unable to accomplish his I sonable Designs, and therefore sent only a few cenary Alans against him, whom indeed for cus'd him for favouring too much. The old to man Soldiers were highly affronted at this Preference which they thought the Emperor gave the I rians, on whose Fidelity and Courage he fee chiefly to rely. This Diffatisfaction was improved by some who were disaffected to Gratian, and wrought fo much upon the Army that in Anger they revolted to Maximus, from whom were promis'd all manner of Favours. A Refo unexpected made Gratian fly from Triers in great Consternation to Paris, whither the Ufurper, after he had easily defeated the Alans, followd, and encamp'd near him. For five Days together both Armies continu'd in their Posts without any Action, except a few Skirmishes, in which the Acvantage was great on neither Side, 'till first the Moors, and then the rest of the Army framefully deferted the Prince, and went over to Maximu Gratian feeing himself thus abandon'd by his 31 jects fled in great hafte towards the South, attended by no more than three hundred Horse, and at last got into Lyons, after he had been refus d Admittance into other Cities. Maximus follow's him close upon the Heels with his whole Army, and attempted at first by plain Force to delivoy him; but being disappointed in that, he had recourse to a Stratagem, in which he forceeded. He procurd forme about Gratian to inform him, that his Wife

Chap. II. XLVI Gt. Val. II. The Arcadius. 199

was coming to him, and mended to meet him on this fide the Rhone, which runs by the City. This News highly pleas'd the unfortunate Prince, who was over-joy'd to hear the Empress was so near at Hand, and without any Hesitation went forth to meet her. In the mean time a Ruthan had by Maximus his Procurement dispos'd of himfelf in a Litter, in which Gratian was made to believe the Empress was. The Emperor with open Asms flood ready to receive her, and the Villain fuddenly started forth, and without any Remorfe deprived him of Life, whom he ought to have defended at the Gratian certain hazard of his own. Thus fell Gracian by Slam. the Hands of a barbarous Traitor, call a Andragathins, in the Flower of his Age, having hardly liv'd twenty eight Years, and reign'd fixteen. He His Chawas a Prince on whom the most inveterate of Pagan ratter. Writers have fasten'd no ill Character; for not to mention his School-mafter Aufonius, they all agree that he was Modest, Gentle, Eloquent and Sincere; that he was Absternious, Sober, Fragal, but not Parcimonious; Devout, but no way Superstitions, They charge him with following the Sports of the Field, and other Recreations too much, neglecting in the mean time the weighty Affairs of the Empire; this may justly be imputed to his Youth, and want of Confideration, and for which there is great teason to think he would have made large Amends in his riper Years; as may be gather'd from his Exploits against the Germans, his Zeal in afficing his Uncle Valens, and Prudence in promoting Theadosius, and thereby providing for the Security of the East. Indeed Aufonius launches out largely in his Commendation, tho' there is nothing contain'd in his whole Panegyrick, that feems to contradict the Sense other Writers had of him, whether Christian or Heathen. In a Word, he was worthy

nd

est y olt in

er,

her

iny

the

i d laft nt-

im

B 20

Was

0 4

CC

afi

tal pe

fo

fte

fo of

he

upo

he

of

fide

St. as y

pref

with

and traoi an I

woul he h

ry h

he 22

Alps

clude

count Confid

fit to

mus'c

ing to Th

to eft:

mon'd ing n

Arian

hiving

a longer Life, but is not the only good Prince whom Treason and Ambition have brought to an untimely Death.

III. We ought not to wonder if Maximus, who had stain'd his Hands in the Blood of his laws Soveraign, should deny him decent Burial after b had procur'd him to be barbarously murder'd; in was an Inhumanity agreeable to a Tyrant and U. furper, whose Cruelty was not satisfy'd with his Death, but rag'd with an implacable Thirst against those whose Loyal Services had rais'd 'em into am degree of Favour with their deceas'd Master. Som Writers have affirm'd that Merobaudes, the Con-

ful for this Year, was privy to Maximus his Prohis Cruelty. ceedings, and confenting to the Death of Gration. for which, if it be true, the Tyrant made him but an ill return; for before the Year was expired he put him to Death, as he did Ballio and several others, whom he suspected to be favourable to the Memory of Gratian, who he thought still surviv'd in their Affections towards him, and renderd his Usurpation weak and insecure. As soon as he found all things succeeded according to his Defire and Expectation, either because he thought himself fafe by this time in his new Dignity, or rather to strengthen and confirm himself in it, he sent his Ambassadors to Theodossus, not to ask his Pardon for what he had acted against Gratian, but to offer Peace, and upon his Acceptance of it to Unite himself in a League with him against the Enemies of the Roman Empire; or in case he rejected that Friendly Offer, to denounce War against him, which must be bloody in the Course of it, and doubtful in the Iffue.

Theodofius, concealing his Thoughts, receiv'd the Ambassadors very honourably, and in appearance

com-

Chap. II. XLVI. Vale. II. Theod. Arcadius. 201

comply'd with the Tyrant's Demands; for he was afraid left, upon his Refusal, he should Invade Italy and Surprize Valentinian, who had neither Experience, nor Forces sufficient to make Head against so powerful an Enemy, who was now become Mafter of Ganl and Spains and Valentinian himself was so sensible of the Danger he was in, and jealous of the Integrity of some that were near him, that he sent St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, to see if upon the Reputation of his Wisdom and Sanctity, he could restrain the Usurper's extravagant Thirst of Empire, and perfuade him to continue on that fide the Alps. Maximus feem'd well pleas'd with St. Ambrose his Errand, either because he had not as yet fettl'd his Affairs in Gaul and Britain, or at present was in want of Mony, the Sinews of War, without which his future Attempts would be vain and ineffectual. He carefs'd St. Ambrose in an extraordinary manner, and ask'd him why Valentinian himself did not come with him, affirming he would have been equally welcome to his Arms, as if he had been his own Son. St. Ambrose made a very handsome Excuse for Valentinian, telling him he was too Young to attempt a fourney over the Alps at so unseasonable a time of the Year; and concluded that he was not come to give him an Account of his Master's Actions, but settle a mutual Considence and Agreement between 'em, if he thought fit to accept of it; and in short he so dexterously amus'd Maximus, that a Peace was concluded according to his Defire.

d

15

16

re

lf

to

is on

er

n•

of

AL

ch

in.

he

CO)

n-

This Year Theodosius, who earnestly endeavour'd to establish a perfect Union in the Church, summon'd another Council to sit at Constantinople, sending not only for the Orthodox Bishops, but the Arians, Eunomians, Novatians, and others; and hiving propos'd a means of an Accommodation between late foll fuls Pla Pie Dig Ele vou of 1 him Gra who on f wou mini dear in th Con Was Wif ons 1 then pear num what lo th of ot

C

fe

pe

ID

W

D

the

Im

fhi

for

Wa

tween em, he outwardly carels'd the Heren lates during the Conference, hoping, by Condescension, to make em more inclinable to Compliance. This was observed by Amphilechia Bishop of Iconium, a Person Eminent for his Doctrine and Piety, who now began to be afraid the Emperor would fuffer himfelf to be feduc'd by the crafty Infinuations of the Arians; and when the other Bishops, upon his Entrance into the Place where the Council was celebrated, rose and paid Theodosius the accustom'd Honours, observing the fame to his Son Arcadius, whom he had lately declar'd Emperor, Amphilochins faluted the Pather, but took no manner of notice of Arcadius, which Theodosius imputing to a Mistake, commanded him to come and render the fame Honours to Arcadius; the Bishop reply'd, He had done his Duty in that be had honour'd the Father: This Answer offended Theodosius, who thought both himself and his Son highly injur'd in it, upon which Amphilochius faid aloud, Your Majesty is in the right in requiring the same Honours to be paid to your Son, which are due to your self; be pleas'd to judge therefore what an heinous Offence they commit against God the Fother, who are so far from giving the Son the Honour due to his Name, that they dare most impiously to revile and blaspheme it. Theodosius was so touch'd with this feafonable Answer, that he ever after e, spous'd the Orthodox Interest with more Zeal, and prohibited the Arians from holding any Publick Assemblies.

He had lately, by his Armies in the Eaft, obtain'd feveral Advantages over the Persians, who therefore by their Ambassadors at Constantinople desird 2 Peace, which Theodofius, whose main Care was the Safety and Prosperity of the Empire, readily granted; and tho' he had then great Armies on Foot in feveral

Chap. II. XLVI. Vale II. Theod. Arcadius. 203

feveral Quarters of the Empire, he at a great Expence beautify'd and improv'd the City, by build-ing several Aquæducts, and a Capacious Port, from whence, as some have conceiv'd, the Turks at this Day call Conframewople it felf, by way of Eminence, the Pert; by feveral wholesom Laws and Royal Immunities he east the Inhabitants of fuch Hardthips, as either the Corruption or Remissness of former Reigns had thrown upon 'em. This Year A.D. was Honorius his fecond Son Born, in the Confulate of Fl. Ricimeres, and Fl. Clearchus, and the Year The Death following had Fl. Arcadius, and Fl. Bante for Con- of the Emfuls. About this time Theodofius loft his Wife cilla. Placilla, or Flaccilla, a Lady as remarkable for her Piety and Munificence, as the was illustrious for her Dignity, with which she never appear'd in the least Elevated, but rather the more Humble and Deyout; the took care often to remind the Emperor of his former Condition, that he might behave himself in his exalted Fortune with a Heart full of Gratitude and Submission to the Will of God, by whom he Reign'd. She not only made a Provision for the Maintenance of the Sick and Infirm, but would her felf often Visit 'em in Person, and Administer to 'em : These extraordinary Qualities endear'd her to the Fathers of the Church, who liv'd in that Age, and who have given Posterity large Commendations of her Virtues. The Emperor was fenfibly touch'd at the loss of fo excellent a Wife, which was follow'd by some new Commotions rais'd by the Gruthungi, a People unknown 'till then to other Nations, but who began now to appear on the other fide of the Ister. They were numerous, and well provided with Arms, and whatever elfe was necessary for a bold Undertaking; so that breaking with ease through the Territories of other Barbarians, under the Conduct of Odetheus their

o-ce id

d m

s;

id-

LIS

ins

.

WT

re-

be

ind

ick

n'd

ore

.1

the

mt-

in eral

Premarus 2 2010 1253

So

the

Sol

to

like

fup

gin

for

Lar

upo

Sum

fwei

unre

Anti

ty,

the]

and o rection

ludg

fende

City

Metr

polis

tres,

up; t

or ful

comm

with '

Empe

Guard

to cur

lofurr

the fev

of tho

Active

T

Promotus
Defeats
the Gruthungi.

their King, they came to the Banks of the and demanded a Passage over. Promotus Lieutenant for the Emperor in those Parts without making much Opposition, openly circum vented em by a Stratagem. He procurd fome in whom he could confide, and were skilful in the Language of the Barbarians, to go in the nature of Deferters over to 'em; they being brought to the King undertook, upon the Promile of a good Reward, to conduct 'em fafely over the River, and betray the Roman Commander and his Army into their Hands. The King readily accepted of the Conditions, and Matters were duly concerted between 'em for the Accomplishment of the intended Delign; but Promotus being inform'd of all by his industrious Emissaries, was so prepard to receive those, who expected to meet with no Opposition, that they were all drown'd before they could reach the opposite Shore, and they who continu'd stall on the other fide, were either taken or put to Flight; the Romans plunder'd their Camp, in which they found a very great Booty, befides Multitudes of Women and Children, who with the Prisoners taken in the Fight were fent to Theodofins, who receiv'd 'em more favourably than they expected, releas'd 'em from their Bonds, regal'd 'em with Prefents, hoping by this his Humanity to purchase their good Will, and make use of 'em in the War he was now preparing against Maximus. But whilst he was intent upon it a Sedition at Antioch, diverted him from his Preparations, which as it was extraordinary in its kind, and brought the City into extream Danger, so in the Sequel it show'd the gentle Temper of Theodosius his Mind. His Son Arcadius was now in the fifth Year of his Sovereignty, and he himself ready to enter into the tenth of his own, fo that this Year he celebrated his Son's

A.D. 387.

Chap H.XLVI. Vale. II. Theod. Arcadius. 205

Son's Quinquennalia, and was making a Provision for the folemnizing his own Decembalia.

As it was usual with the Emperors to present the Soldiers with a Donative upon their first Promotion to the Imperial Dignity, fo did they always do the like upon these Solemnities, at which time they were suppos'd to renew their Power, and in a manner begin their Reign afresh. The necessary Preparations for the War design'd against Maximus, and this Largess which the Emperor was to make, as well upon his own as his Son's account, requir'd a great

Sum of Mony; for which reason he exacted an answerable Supply from the People. This seem'd so A Sedition unreasonable an Oppression to the Inhabitants of at Antioch. Antioch, that they rais'd a great Sedition in the City, demolishing his Statues, together with those of the late Empress Flaccilla, those of his two Sons, and of his Father Theodosius.

d

5

e

0,

h

IL

0 es

TS.

êe.

d,

th

Se.

ar

Ilt

10

X-

to

he

on

11-th

his

n's

The Emperor, upon the first News of this Insurrection, was highly displeased, and sent away two Judges with full Powers to try and punish the Offenders; who arriving at Antioch first depriv'd the City of all her Privileges, degraded her from her Metropolitan Honour, and made Laodicea Metropolis of Syria; they commanded all the Baths, Theatres, Forums, and other Publick Places to be shut up; the most Eminent of the City, who were known or fuspected to be guilty, were apprehended, and committed to Prison, where they were presented with Tortures, and terrify'd with the sense of the Emperor's Indignation; a fufficient Number of Guards were plac'd in all the Quarters of the City to curb the Citizens, and restrain'em from any new Infurrection; the Judges were bufy'd in preparing the severest Inquisitions, and in seizing the Estates of those, who were suspected to have been the most Active, whilst the disconsolate Inhabitants had no Comfort,

Comfort, but in their Devotions, and the of St. Chryfostome, who then resided in that Con A great part of the Inhabitants, and they who had been the Ring-leaders in the Uprour, when the heard how highly the Emperor was offer cially at the Indignity offer'd his deceas'd withdrew themselves from the Storm which faw gathering over 'em. Several Hermits, who a retir'd Life in the adjacent Mountains had no fooner heard of the miferable Condition the City was in, but they repair'd thither, and by ther inportunate Arguments prevailed with the Judges to suspend their farther Proceedings, 'rill by dome proper Messenger they had attempted to appeale the Emperor, and foften him into Pity towards em The very principal Men in that flourishing City had been arraign'd and condemn'd, and there wanted no thing but the Execution of the Sentence prohound against 'em; with very earnest and repeated Importunities St. Chryfostome and these Hermits obtain d Reprieve from the Judges, 'till a Report of their whole Proceedings had been made to the Emperor and his further Pleasure were known. None ferm's more ready, or indeed more proper to appear be fore Theodofeus in behalf of thealmost desolate City than Flavius, Bishop of the Place; who forefeeld the Danger undertook the Employment hortly a ter the Fact was committed, and before the Con missioners fent by Theodofins were arrived; and whe herame to Constantinople found the Emperor high ly incens'd against them, however by his persually Carriage and pathetical Entreaties he obtain'd hi Defire. The Emperor represented to him, in long and lively Expostulation, the Kindness heli ever express'd to that City, ask'd him what ill Of tes he had ever done 'em that could provoke 'em to ! undutiful a Resentment, which not content to offer In digniti dige Fur pret of b mor Impl bega their and t for t [enfib gent . Exile

ted 1

of a Forbe mar i woula Favor

f ma Geme rai

4 j vere e wanc' beech

rov'd blum Havia Comm

Libert Love lew q

with fo wen nd uf

pendin

Chapith XLVI Val. II Theor Arcadius. 207

カナルはかい

10

ty

þ.

to 0-

he

pr-

d ien

TOT

m'e

be ity eint

he

igh

fiv hi

in

h

Off

tory

niti

dignities to the Living, broke our in most inhivening Fury against the Dead. He told him, he had ever weterr'd Antioch to all other Cities, and in the beight of his Prosperity earnestly desir'd to see its promising more Satisfaction to himfelf from that than all bis Imperial Pomp and outward Enjoyments. Flavian began his Answer with a hearty Acknowledgment of their Infolence and Ingratitude, which he aggravated to the Emperor, confessing to him, That Fire and the Sword were Puni shments too mild and gentle for their Offences, of which they were now fo truly fensibles and of their undutiful Returns to so indutunt a Prince, that they dreaded his Anger more than Exile or Captivity: He reminded him of the Duty of a Christian, who ought to imitate the Mercy and forbearance of God Almighty; and show'd him how nar he would approach that Divine Original, if be would reftore the disconsolate City to his Grace and Favour. He told him, He had now an Opportunity if making himself a lasting. Beample to all Posterity of Umency and good Nature; that it was in his power nraise as from the Dead his miserable Subjects, who is a just Sense and Apprehension of his Displeasure were dying aiready, even before the Sentence was denunc'd against 'em. In a Word, this admirable beech, as it is represented at large in St. Chryfoftome, rov'd for efficacious with the Emperor, that he ould not reftrain from Tears, but immediately fent Havian back to put a stop to the Proceedings of the Commissioners, to restore the City to her ancient liberties and Privileges, and the Citizens to his love and Protection. The News of his Success lew quick before him to Antioch, and was receiv'd with fo universal a Toy, that almost the whole Ciwent out to meet their Holy Bishop on the Way. and usher'd him in with Songs and Acclamations, bending the Day in Fealts and Triumphe, as if Antioch tioch had now begun, and the Day which her to her forfeited Honours, had been the fift

C

CO

tic

th

W

Wi

len

M

wh

20

the

ren

wh

mu

mu

atte

driv

Rel

and

fices

fenc

he r fius

with

Rom

they

City

he k

resol

mia,a penni

that gave a Being to 'em.

This Matter being fo happily ended, Theodofin found himself more at leisure to prosecute his Defigns against Maximus, who toward the latter end of this Year had broken into Italy, and driven away Valentinian, who, with Justina his Mother and his Sister Galla, fled to Thessalonica in Illyricum, whither Theodosius went to meet him.

For we are to understand that Maximus, after he had fully fecur'd to his Obedience most of those Nations who obey'd Gratian, thought his Work but half done, 'till he had strengthen'd himself by the Addition of Valentinian's Share too, and fent him to follow his Brother's Fortune. Valentinian had lately fent Domninus, a Syrian, in an Embafficto him. This Domninus was a Person of great Esteem, and particularly regarded by the Emperor, who had a great Confidence in him, and made him a Partner of all his Secrets. Maximus receiv'd this Amballador with great Civility, entertain'd him with much Magnificence, and express'd himself with so much Tenderness towards Valentinian, that he thought his Master infinitely happy in so sincere a Friend. The Tyrant had long been contriving in fecret what Course he was to take to march his Army into Italy; the long and usual Way over the Alps would be dangerous for so great a Body of Men, and afford Valentinian Time to prepare for his Reception; and to those nearer and more commodious Passages he was an utter Stranger: But now the better to compass his Designs, he deliver'd part of his Army into Domninus his Hands, as for the Emperor's Ule, to ferve him against the Barbarians that began to infest Pannonia; with which unexpected Supply Domninus return'd, wonderfully exalted at the Success of Maximus bis Policy.

Chap.II.XLVI. Vale. II. Theod. Arcadius. 209

6

d

y 113

u-

he

ofe

rk

Бу

ent

un

to

m,

nd

ner Tà-

ich

ich

his

The

hat

lta-

be

ord

and

he

m-nto

to

fest

nni-

s of

his

his Negotiations, and march'd at the Head of his Forces the nearest and safest Way into Italy. Maximus, who found his Stratagem met with the defir'd Effect, follow'd with the rest of the Army at a convenient Distance behind, sending some light Parties before him, who were to observe the way Domninus took, and intercept all they met, and by that Means keep his Expedition fecret. His Orders were so exactly observ'd, that he got safe into Italy without meeting any Enemy to oppole him, and directed his Course immediately to Aquileia. Valentinian was so much terrify'd at his unexpected Approach, that he immediately embark'd with his Mother and Sifter, and fet Sail for Theffalonica; where when he was arriv'd he fent and intreated Theodofius to chastise the Usurper, for the Injuries offer'd to the Family of Valentinian. Hereupon Theodofins Theodofiremov'd with some of the Senate to Thessalonica, usresolves where it was refoly'd in Council to punish Maxi- to chastise mus, who had not only by his treasonable Practices Maximus. murder'd Gratian and usurp'd his Authority, but attempted the same upon Valentinian, and had now driven him out of his Dominions. Pursuant to this Resolution Theodosius prepar'd to march against him, and having promoted fuch Persons to the chief Offices in the Provinces, as he knew would in his Absence have a regard to the Good of his Subjects, he made Promotus General of the Foot, and Timasus of the Horse. He sent the Empres Justina, with her Son and Daughter under a good Guard to Rome, prudently conceiving that by their Presence they would encourage the Inhabitants to defend the City against any Attempts of Maximus, to whom he knew the Citizens were generally disaffected; resolving himself to march through the upper Pannonia, and fall on a fudden upon the Enemy from the Appennine Mountains. Maximus, who continu'd all this

A. D. 388.

(

h

he

V

do

th

w

he

fur

Pad

TOU foll

do

The wit

ver To it w nica and

him

held

fenfe

had white

him

Ord

mus heari

to an long

to hi

Max fathe

while at Agnikia, had notice of the Preparties that were making against him, and us'd all his End vours to disappoint and prevent him. He had be mighty Promifes perfuaded the Barbarians, in con junction with the Roman Legions, by way of Diversion to revolt, and find Theodosius work in Thruce and give him the more time to confirm his Power in Iraly. Of these his Practices the Emperor had timely Intelligence, and broke all his Meafures by fending a sufficient Number of Troops, that differfed the Barbarians before they could unite themfelves into any confiderable Body, and having fer tled all things in those Quarters he prepard for Expedition.

Maximus being inform'd that Justina delight cross the Ionian Gulf in her way to Rome, mann't out a few Pinnaces, and fent Andragathius if pollible to intercept her; who, tho' he us'd the usmost Expedition, fail'd of his Design, for the had pas'd the Gulf before his Arrival; whereupon he strengthen'd his Squadron by the Accession of several other Ships, defigning to dispute the Passage with Theatfins, who he thought would transport his Forces over the Sea. But the Emperor, purfuent to his former Resolutions, directed his March towards Pannonia, and the Appennines; while Maximus, he ving as he thought fecur'd himself of Italy and A frick, was intent upon raising Mony, making ale of the vileft and most shameful Means that would ferve to his Purpose, 'till the News of Theadofins his Preparations diverted him from his Extorcions. As foon as he was inform'd of the Emperor's Motions he march'd at the Head of his Army over the Julian Alps into Pannonia, to make fure of the Palfes in those Quarters, and having fortify'd Perovio, which was furrender'd to him, he mov'd with all Expedition to Sciscia, call'd at present Sescer, where

Chap. W. XL. VI, Wale. H. Thend. Arcadius. 411

he staid correspond him, and having past'd the Sand he drew his Menous and offer'd him Battel, which he accepted and was defeated, tho his Men fought with a great deal of Courage and Refolution. This Victory, which was very exmaordinary, coft Theedefins but a few Men, the Lofs of whom was more than supplyed by a part of Maximus his Army, which furrender'd themfelves up to him. From hence he march'd against Marsellinus, Brother to the Lifurper, who had firengthead himself at Peravie, not Padnin, as fome have miffaken it, whom he totally routed; and purfuing the course of his Fortune, he follow d Maximus plofe upon the Heels, and fate retires to down before Aquileis, where the Ufurper had fe- Aquileia, cured himself, and provided for a Siege, which Theodofins puth'd on with much Vigour. They within defended themselves at first with much & very, but, finding the Emperor refole'd to carry Town, and observing Maximus to despond, and it were thake off that Sovereigney he had to tyrannically usurp'd, they seiz'd upon him, bound him, is taken, and presented him to Theodosius, having first stripp'd him of his Imperial Ornaments. The Emperor beheld him with Byesof Compassion, and out of a just fense of Fortune's Inconstancy had pardon'd him, had not those about him perceived it in his Looks, which melted with Pity towards him, and taking him out of his fight cut off his dlead, without any and be-Order from Theodofius. Andragarbius, whom Mani- headed. mus had made his Admiral, as we observed before, hearing of the Tyrant's Defeat as he has cruifing to and fee upon the fonian Bay, threw himfelf headlong into the Sea, there to receive the Reward due to his Crueky and Treason: And Wiffer, the Son of Maximus, who had been declared Augustus by his father, and left to command in Gaul, was defeated.

h-

es

ds

he-

A

afe

ild

RHS

M15.

oti-

the

ef-

vio. all

ere he had fent thither for that purpole. Thus did mency.

20

[p

mi

U

lab

fhu

COI

the

Cit

Inh

prei

dete

Zoz

whi

Age

to C

the !

Bigo

to P muc

Book Supp

Pen i and .

the 7

gerou

to the

Autho urpate

exana

howey Effuli

Alexan Heath

to con

on and Cledofius by his Vigour and Conduct put a freedy End to a War, which at first promis'd it felf a longer Continuance, and threaten'd the Empire with a great Theodofi- many Calamities. And the Honour and Reputati. us his great on he acquir'd in his Success, was highly improved Moderati- by his Moderation and Clemency in the afe of it; for he not only settled Valentinian in the peaceable Possession of Italy, his own Share of the Empire, but relinquish'd to him Gaul, and Spain, and Britain, with whatever else the Tyrant had seiz'd on the Murder of Gratian, being fatisfy'd withthe Con he had done, without drawing any particular vantage from it to himself. And so far was he f oppressing Maximus his Friends and Relations, that except two or three of the most feditious, who put to Death as an Example of Terror to or he pardon'd all those who had embrac'd the Us per's Interest; so that under so merciful a @ ror they felt not that they were conquer'd. for Maximus his Wife and Daughters out o Confinement, settled an honourable Pension em for their Lives, and charged a near Kinsa their own to take care of their Interests, and see that no Body oppress'd 'em. Theodofius continu'd the rest of this Year partly #

> Aquileia, and partly at Milan, where he published an Edict on the 9th of October, by which he tevoked all the publick Acts made by Maximus, who he terms Infandissimus Tyrannorum; but the following he went with Valentinian and his So norius to Rome, and refided there the greatel of the Summer. Here he was receiv'd with all t Respect due to his Person and Dignity; and while he was follow'd with Applauses and Acclamations from the Senate and People, for his late Succe 389.

A.D.

against

Chap II. XLVI. Vale. II. Theod. Arcadius. 213

against Maximus, he behav'd himfelf in every feed with the profounded Humility, appropriation nothing to himself, but referring all to mighty, who had chosen Valentinian and himself us his Instruments of Revenge upon a Tyrant and Usurper. During his Residence in this City he He comlabour'd seriously in the Suppression of Idolatry, mands the hutting up the Temples of the Heathen Deities, Temples at commanding their Statues to be remov'd from Rome to thence, and to be erected in the Publick Parts of the be shut up. City to serve as Ornaments to it. The Christian Inhabitants, animated by the Zeal Theodosius express'd for Religion, broke down the Images, those detested Objects of Idolatry; and, if we may believe Zozimus, feiz'd upon the precious Ornaments with which the Ignorance and Superstition of former Ages had wonderfully enrich'd'em; and what feem'd to concern him more nearly than all the rest, burnt the Books of the Sybills, the Sacred Oracles of the Bigotred Heathens, and thoroby gave a fatal Stroke to Paganism; from whence we may gather how much they are in the right, who affirm, that the Books that appear under that Quality at present are Suppositious, sent into the World by some Pestilent Pen in the early Days of Christianity, to pervert and corrupt a great many well-meaning Men in the Times succeeding, and give Birth to some dangerous and mortal Errors that by degrees crept into the Church. As the Emperor's Presence and Authority encourag'd the Christians at Rome to extirpate Idolatry, fo did his Example inspire the Aexandrians in Egypt with the like Zeal, which however made a greater Noise, and occasion'd the Effusion of some Blood. Theophilus, Bishop of A bloody Alexandria, had begg'd of the Emperor an old Tumult at Heathen Temple, at that time ruin'd and forfaken, Alexanto convert it to a Christian Church, to which the

į.

t;

út

ir,

of fee

rat hid to him the him to him

ccel ainst

Emperor readily condescended. As they clearing it of the Rubbish, the Workmen four clearing it of the Rubbish, the Workmen found among the Ruins several filthy obscene Pigure of Priapus, which the Bishop order'd to be exped in Publick, to ridicule the Superstition of the ancient Egyptians; and about the same time they discover d'their Subterraneous Grottoes, where they usually perform'd their abominable Sacrifices. The Heathens, exceedingly frandaliz'd at thefe Affront, fell in great Fury upon the Christians, forme of whom they wounded, others they kill'd; and feizing upon the Temple of Serapis, built upon a Hill by unc of the first Kings of Egypt, call'd Sefostris, they fortify'dit, and in their frequent Excursions leiz'd upon the Christians, whom they constrain it to Sacrifice to their Idol, or upon their Refulal they fix'd 'em on a Cross, where they were put to un-The Emperor being inform'd speakable Torments. of this Tumult, gave Order to the Maguittees of the City, Not to revenge upon the Pagangela Denth of those who had obtain'd the Crown of Man at their Hands, but rather pardon em, and gentle Methods to win 'em over to Christianica bu however he commanded 'em to destroy all the Timple that had given Birth to the Sedition; these Or ders were exactly observed to the great Joy of the Christians, and Confusion of their Advertage, who had been taught by their Traditions, that the In undations of the River Nile, from whence proceed ed the Fertility of their Country, was owing to the benign Influence of their God Serupis; an they concluded therefore, that now he was delivered the River would no longer overflow, the quence of which would be an universal Famine but when afterwards they observ'd on the contrary that the Nite fwell'd to a much higher degree that had been known in the Memory of Man, an thereby

a

fi

h

ni

le

ei

W

di

be

fo

ne

the

anc

fin

his hin

he of

to l

lish

hav

to i

Adu

Chap.II. XLVI. Vale. II. Theod. Arcadius. 215

thereby produc'd a great Plenty of all manner of Provisions, a great many of the Heathens renounc'd their Ancient Errors, and worshipp'd the God of the Christians, who makes the Sun to rife, and the Rain descend upon the Earth,

hey

hey

The

ints,

mon bon

one hey

iz d

Sahey

00-

s of inth

dam

bu

am-

Or

Feb

wh

In

g to ine

ary

ha

and

reb

Theodosius, before he left Rome, is said effectual- Theodosily to have reform'd two abominable Abuses, which us reforms fome things were at that time a great Scandal and Disgrace to at Rome. that Queen of Cities, as Socrates terms her; there were large and ancient Buildings in Rome, referv'd as Store-houses of Bread wherewith the City was fupply'd; under these Buildings were the Bakehouses, and on each side of 'em, through the Connivance of the Overfeers, were built Victualling and Tipling Houses, where Women were entertain'd for lewd Purposes, and many who reforted thither, either to fatisfie their Hunger, or gratifie their Luft, were stripp'd of all they had, and commonly so dispos'd of, by means of a private Conveyance out of those Tipling Houses into the blind Bake-House beneath, where they were compell'd to Grind, and fo kept in perpetual Slavery, that their Friends could never hear of 'em after. It happen'd that one of the Emperor's Soldiers was thrown into this Hole, and so receiv'd into the blind Bake-house, where, finding himself like to be made a slave, he drew his Dagger, of which they had forgot to Difarm him, and killing all those that oppos'd his Passage, he escap'd, and got means to inform the Emperor of it, who immediately commanded the Overleers to be punish'd as they deserv'd, and order'd their Houses, the Receptacles of Thieves, to be demolish'd. The other Abuse, which he took care to have remov'd, was this. It was cultomary in Rome to inflict such a Punishment on a Woman taken in Adultery, as remov'd not the Sin, but increas'd the Vice, for they confin'd her to narrow Stews, where fhe ny Shame, to such Adventurers as were provided for her; and whilst the Deed was doing her Neighbours were inform'd by the means of some sounding Vessel prepar'd for that purpose, that she was that Moment under Correction; this horrible Custom Theodosius abolish'd, and enacted other Laws for the Punishment of Women taken in Adultery. For the last of these Stories the Reader has no more than Socrates his Word, and therefore he is at Liberty to believe it or not, but the other is supported with better Authority.

A. D. 390.

From Rome both the Emperors remov'd by the way of Valentia to Milan, when Valentinian was declar'd the fourth time Conful, together with Nootherius, and as if he had some Jealousie of what shortly after follow'd, he publish'd an Order that no one should be admitted to attend upon his Perfon, but fuch as had first receiv'd his own Approbation; the Year following Theodosius remov'd towards the East, being accompany'd by Valentinian as far as Aquileia, where he left him; and proceeding on his Way to Constantinople, he arriv'd at Thef-Calonica, where he found the Affairs of Macedonia to be in a great Confusion; for the Barbarians, who, at the Instigation of Maximus, had revolted just as he was entring upon his Expedition against the Usurper, and upon his fending a part of his Forces to reduce 'em, had fecur'd themselves among the Lakes and Fastnesses in the Woods, taking the Advantage of his Absence, broke out of their Holds, and ravag'd Theffaly and Macedonia without any Opposition, disposing of the Lives and Fortunes of the Inhabitants at their own Pleasures; but as soon as they heard of the Emperor's Success, and his Return, they again withdrew into their Dens, from whence they stole out fecretly in the Night-time, and feizing on whatfoever came in their way, they return'd

Spi ing wit

TI

trui four

in a

Cot a fm

him what Nigh

'till Char

ceal l

that] had ling, ing, repair

on the

and w Atinacy him,

forc'd he was

hey am

Chap.II.XLVI.Vale.II. Theod. Arcadius. 217

t

f

H

ie is

at

at

-

4-

o-

d-ſ

16

o,

he

es

he

dls,

ny

ot

on

115

m

ne,

ey d return'd with their Booty before the Morning Light. These secret Excursions, and nocturnal Depredations, made Theodosius imagine the Aggresfors were Spirits and Apparitions, rather than Men; but being refolv'd, if possible, to find out the Truth, without discovering his Designs to any one, he made choice of five Persons in whom he could trust to attend him, ordering 'em to take three or four spare Horses a-piece, that they might shift as often as there was occasion. Thus attended, and in a Disguise, he rang'd about the Country, receiving from the Peafants such Refreshments as their Cottages could afford him. At length he came to a small Inn, kept by an old Woman, who receiv'd him very civilly, entertaining him with Wine and what other Conveniences she had in the House, and Night coming on he was perfuaded to Lodge there till the Morning; when he was retir'd into his Chamber he observ'd a certain Man, who declin'd Conversing with him, and seem'd desirous to conceal himself. The Emperor, surprized at his Carriage, calls for his Holtess, and demands of her who that Person was; she answer'd, that who he was she men not, but ever since the News of the Empetor's Return with the Army out of the West this Man had lodg'd at her House, going out in the Morning, and continuing abroad all Day, but at Night topair'd home, as from Work, to his Supper, and his Lodging, for which he honestly paid her. Upon this Information the Emperor order'd the Man to be feiz'd, and commanded him to declare who and what he was; which he refus'd with much Oblinacy, 'till the Emperor had declar'd himself to him, and his Followers had with feveral Tortures orc'd the Truth out of him; then he confess'd that he was employ'd, as a Spy, by the Barbarians that y among the Bogs, to give 'em Intelligence from time

C

m

h

WI

ma

the

of

M

19301

to 1

to i

Pro

cut

or I

ting

levy

of t

A

feco

here

Fore

quir

into

lever

Publ

rers.

by N

toun his S

all m

his A

Patro

CORCE his F

deny

how

fon.

time to time where he lay with his Army, and what Persons and Places lay the most commodious out of the state o for their Incursions. Hereupon the Emperor caus'd his Head to be rians.

the Barbu- ftruck off, and returning early the next Morning to the Army, led his Soldiers to that Place where he had learnt from the Spy the Barbarians were lodg'd, and falling at an Advantage upon 'em, destroy'd a great Number of 'em, killing the most resolute as they defended themselves in the Bogs, and dragging the rest out of their Retirements. One Timasius had at this time a Principal Command in the Army, who, according to Zozimus, could not but admire the extraordinary Courage of the Emperor, who appear'd the formost in all Dangers; he conceiving the greatest number of the Barbarians to be Slain, and that the rest could not escape them whom therefore they might pursue at their leifure defir'd the Emperor would allow the weary and hungry Soldiers time to refresh themselves after a warm and desperate a Service, to which Theodofia readily confented, so that sounding a Retreat the gave over the Pursuit, and falling to with more Ag petite then Discretion, they first overcame them felves with Wine, and then fell fast afleep, an thereby gave the Barbarians an Advantage the were too wary to omit. They fell with great fu ry upon the Romans, who were unprepar'd to d fend themselves against an Enemy they thought He is in ready vanquish'd, and had destroy'd the Emper great Dan- himself, had he not been seasonably reliev'd Promotus, who rescu'd his Master at the great H zard of his own Life. This piece of Service u doubtedly deferv'd a great Reward, but fuch, a cording to Zozimus, was the unhappy Influen Rufinus, a Person we shall hear more of hereasts had upon this Emperor, that he procur'd him to m murder'd; the whether this was done by Theodofies his Privity, or Refines his treacherous Practices with the Barbarians, by whose Hands he fell, remains still a Doube among the other Historians of those Times. Certain it is Russess was a Person of great Interest with the Emperor, and being a Man of a bold aspiring Temper, the look on Premetas as a great Obstacle to his ambitious Deligns.

The Emperor had hitherto try'dby Force of Arms to restrain those Rovers, but the more effectually to suppress 'em he publish'd a Law, by which the Provincials of Macedonia had Power to relift, and cut off those who enter'd upon their Possessions, or lay lurking in the High-way; thereby abrogating an old Edict, forbidding any private Man to kvy War without the Knowledge or Approbation

DUS

be ing

erc

ere de-

ge-

and

One

in

not

m-

he

s to

em. ure

and

er la

ofin

he

A

em

20

the

Fu

d

16 4

bend

b

H e u

,

asi ifu

to m

of the Emperor. At his Arrival at Constantinople, Fl. Arcadins the second time, and Rustinus were declar d Consuls a here finding himself for the present free from any Foreign Disturbances, he began diligently to enquire into the Corruptions that had lately crept into the State, reforming by several wholesom but levere Laws a great many Abuses, that during the Publick Calamities had been practifed by his Offiers. From this his Fasherly Care he was diverted by News our of the West, where Valentinian was found frangled in his Palace. Theodofius, during his Stay in Italy, had, as we observed before, us'd all means to extirpate Heathenism, restraining by his Authority those who appeard the most zealous Patrons for it; but at his Return they began to tonceive new Hopes, and apply'd to Valentinian for his Favour and Protection, which when they were deny'd they enter'd upon new Meafures, and confulted now to purchase a Toleration at the price of Treafon. Arbogaster, a Frank by Nation, had at this time

A. D.

his

up

kill

Ar

bar

ope

the

only

was

tor,

the

Tho

the C

ed w

how

Guil

Hope

of C

1 Gai

thori

mine.

public

felf ra

fer'd 1

excell

lober,

in his

ted to whofe

fore he

he was

lions,

T

time the Chief Command in the Army; he cold his first Preferment to Gratian, and after his De wonderfully gain'd upon the Soldiers, who efteend him for his Experience in Military Affairs, and his great Contempt of Mony, and made him General without the Participation of Valentinian, fo ther he arrogated a Power to himself of controlling the Emperor, and reprehending him for whatever he thought done amis. To him the disaffected Party apply'd themselves, and encourag'd him to destroy that Power he had already supplanted. About the time Valentinian was inform'd the Barbarians began to threaten the Borders of Italy, and being then in Gaul refolv'd to March against 'em, and chastife their Infolence; but whilft he was confulting in Council the properest Means to forward his Expedition, he was thwarted in all his Designs by Arbogastes, with whose Insolence he was so much provok'd that he drew out his Sword, and attempted to kill him, declaring he had rather kill himself than bear the Title of Emperor without enjoying the Authority; but being with-held by some who stood near him, he threw Arbogastes a Paper, which contain'd an Abrogation of his Command: Arbogastes, when he had perus'd the Contents of it, tore it in pieces, declaring that he received now his Au thority from him, nor should it be in his Power to di vest him of it; and from this time us'd the unfortunate Prince more like a Prisoner than his Soveraign disposing of the Chief Commands in the Army according to his own Pleasure, and placing such about him, who observ'd him rather as Spies, than obey'd him as Servants. In this melancholy Condition Valentinian sent and desir'd Aid from Theodosius; but Arbogastes was gone so far now, that he found it necessary to proceed farther, and made good that old Saying, "That there is but a small distance between

Chap. II. XLVI. Vale. II. Theod. Arcadius. 221

"the Prisons and Graves of Princes; and therefore got him privately to be murder'd at Vienna in France; valentinis having corrupted some of the Officers belonging to an murhis Chamber, who strangled him whilst he was a- der'd. fleep, and tring a Cord about his Neck hung him up, that the World might be induc'd to think he kill'd himself, and not tax them with his Murder. Arbogastes had no mind to appear guilty of so barbarous a Treason himself, and therefore would not openly usurp the Imperial Authority, but chose rather to confer it on Eugenius, who was to be Prince Eugenius only by his Permission and Allowance. Engenins usurps. was a Man of great Learning, an accomplish'd Orator, elegant and facetious, but very uncable of the Sovereign Dignity to which he was design'd. Tho' Arbogastes endeavour'd to divert from himself the Odium of fo unnatural a Treason, yet he is charged with it by all the Writers of that Age, who however feem not to condemn him fo much as his Guilt deserv'd; whether this proceeded from the Hopes they at first conceiv'd of Eugenius, or out of Complaifance to Theodofus, who in the end was Gainer by his Death, having the Sovereign Authority united in his own Family, is hard to deter-

20

in

fe:

in

X-

ho-diff w

ho

ch bo-

ore

di-

ED-

Var

but i od

eep

The Ecclefiattical Writers fay his Death was a The Chapublick Loss to the World, and even Zozimus him-ratter of lelf raises no Charge against him. Had he been suf-Valentinifer'd to live longer he had undoubtedly proved an acellent Prince, being of a lively Spirit, valiant, liberal, fincere in his Friendship, and devout in his Religion. He had in his Youth been committed to the Care of St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, whose Instructions made him an Enemy to Vice be-he was young he was an absolute Master of his Pasfons, and was generally more severe to himself than he

he c ther

The with

the

made were

Conc

Rome

Italy.

nity (

advan

Streng

and fo

wards

were r

ins, B

Broth

an hi

bllow

Pannon

the 7 n

Ittely g

Milan,

Christi

erstitie

hafect

mtage Observa

m'd b leligion

fole

afuade

leligion

hateve

mpero

Theod

he was to others. He was murder'd at Vienna in France, after he had reign'd fixteen Years and an half, and lived upwards of twenty.

IV. Tho' all good Men were fenfibly afflicted at the Death of this innocent Prince, none appear'd fo nearly touch'd as Theodosius, who had now lost a Collegue and Allie in the flower of his Age, defroy'd by the treasonable Practices of those, of whom he had great Reason to be jealous; for Arbogastes wa bold and valiant, and Eugenius renown'd for io Lean ing and other Virtues; fo that he made all Prepara tions possible for a War: In the midst of which Am baffadors arriv'd from Eugenius the Ufurper, who without taking the least notice of Arbogaftes, de manded of him if he would admit of Eugenius his Collegue, or confider him as his Enemy. The odofies, according to his Custom, amused the An baffadors with fair Words and Royal Prefents, di miffing 'em with ambiguous Answers, whilft hee ply'd himself with great Diligence to his Militar Preparations, in which he spent almost two Year concealing as much as possible his Defigns till was able to put 'em in execution. Like a Christian he made use of the Means Christianity suggested him, in order to obtain the Divine Favour, publish ing a new Edict at Constantinople against the Heathe Worship, and reviving the ancient Laws against H reticks, their Ordinations and Assemblies; and h a Father of his People abrogated an old Law, which punish'd those with Death, who spoke sedition Words against the Prince; Because, said he, if the proceed from Levity they are to be despised, if fro Madness to be pitied, if from Malice to be forgiven

A. D. 393. declared Emperor.

The Beginning of this Year Theodofius had d clared his Younger Son Honorius Emperor, and tending to leave Arcadins behind at Confidentinop

Chap.II.XLVII. Theo Arcad Honorius. 223

at

fo

rd

he

in.

m

ho

dt

るとはる

ean

PI

tia

do lift

The H

hid

tio

fth

fro

ven

d

di

he committed him to the Care of Rufinus, who was thereby vested with almost an unlimited Power. The Emperor Strengthen'd his own regular Troops with the Addition of feveral Barbarians inhabiting the other fide the Danube and Euxine Sea, who made him a voluntary Offer of their Service, and were of great use to him in this War, under the Conduct of Alarich the Goth, who afterwards took Rome, and was the first that led the Barbarians into haly. For during this War they had an Opportunity of viewing the Country, of observing the most dvantageous Passes, the Fruitfulness of the Soil, Strength of the State, and Number of the Inhabitants; nd so were the better encouraged to return aftervards with greater Numbers, and subdue those they vere now come to ferve. Having appointed Timain, Bacurius, and Stilicho, who had marry'd his Brother's Daughter, Commanders in chief, he bem his Expedition the thirteenth of March the Year blowing, directing his March through Thrace into lannonia, and defigning from thence to break thro' the Julian Alps into Italy, which the Usurper had tely got into his own Power, and being arrived at Milan, tho' he had hitherto made a Profession of Christianity, he turn'd aside to the heathenish Surestitions at the Instigation chiefly of Flavianus, refect of Rome, who promis'd him mighty Admages from the Impection of the Sacrifices, and Observation of the Stars; assuring him he was den'd by Fate to restore the ancient Greatness and bligion of the Romans, and that he would in time fole Emperor of the World. Hereupon he was sluaded to allow em the free Exercise of their eligion, to re-edifie the Altar of Victory, and hatever else had been formerly deny'd 'em by the operors Theodofins and Valentinian: And hearing Theodefins his Forwardness he muster'd his For-

0 til

th

E

20

gr

BA

Pa

CO

to

rev

me

fuc

Car

fure

En

Em

Bre

on 1

killi

fenc

ed t ous

Head

chie

the !

have

on o

that arose

it dre

per t

upon

Priv'

nemi

vertly

ces, and so set out from Milan, accompany'd by Arbogastes and Flavianus, whom he had made his Lieutenant-Generals, swearing publickly at his Departure, that if ever he liv'd to return victorious he would put all the Priests to death, and make a Stable of the great Church; because looking upon him as an Apostate and Usurper they would not accept of his Offerings, nor suffer him to communicate in Prayer with the rest of the Faithful.

Engenius used so much Diligence in his March that a detatch'd Party had feiz'd on the Julian Alp before Theodosius could come up, who however at tack'd the Guards with so much Bravery and Reso lution, that he easily beat 'em out of that advantageous Post. Flavian the Præfect, fighting with much Obstinacy, was slain in this Action, in whose Fall Eugenius his Party suffer'd a considerable Loss Theodosius, trusting to his Cause, and his propition Fortune, push'd on with great Alacrity, and having without much Difficulty pass'd the Mountain, h descended with all his Forces into the Plain, when he offer'd his Enemy Battel, which Eugenius with great Readiness accepted. The Emperor dispose his Army into two Battalions, one confifting of the Barbarians, under the Command of Gaines and Ba curius, the other of Romans led on by Stiliche encouraging his Soldiers by his Presence and Di scourse, admonishing 'em to behave themselves like Men, confiding in the Protection of their Saviour under whose Banner they fought. On the other fide Eugenius had erected the Standard of Hercula and behav'd himself like a Man sure of Victory deluded by the vain Promises of the Heathen Prielts who in the Name of their Deities had promis'd hin Theodosi- an entire Conquest. At a Signal given both Armie us engages engag'd, and Zozimus saith that during the Figh with Euge- there happen'd so great an Eclipse that for a long nius,

Chap. II. XLVII. Theo. Arcad. Honorius. 225

by

hi

Dr.

s he

Sta-

him

cept

te in rch.

Alp

r at efo

arita-

with hof

Loss

tiou

Via

, h

her

with pos e

f th

d Ba

licho

D

s lik

riour

othe

cules

Hory

rielts

hin

rmie

Figh

long time the Sun was almost totally darken'd; however the Fight continu'd with great Slaughter, 'till in the End Eugenius prevail'd, for the Barbarians being unable to fland the Shock of the Reman Legions gave ground, and were most of 'em cut off together with Bacurius their Commander. Night coming on both Parties retreated to their Camps, where Eugenins, concluding himself the Victor, and that nothing was to be fear'd from Theodosius after so great a Defeat, rewarded fuch of his Men as had behav'd themselves best, dismissing 'em all to their Ease and Refreshment. In the mean time Theodosius was advis'd by fuch as were about him not to hazard a fecond Engagement, but rely upon the Fortune of another Campaign, against which time he would have leifure to recruit his Army, and be able to match his Enemy with an equal Number of Men; but the Emperor, collecting the Remainder of his Forces by Break of Day, fell with an unexpected Bravery upon the Enemy, securely sleeping in their Campa killing all fuch who had not time to make any De fence or beg for Quarter; and by this means refeue and deed the Victory out of the Hands of a prefumptu- feats him. ous Usurper; who seem'd to want nothing but the Head of Theodofins to crown his Success. This is thiefly the Account Zozimus gives of the Fight, in the Substance of which he agrees with others that have writ concerning it; only they make no mention of an Eclipse, instead of which they assure us that in the fecond Engagement so violent a Tempest arole, as the Memory of Man could not equal; that it drove so furiously upon the Army of the Usurper that it turn'd their Arrows and Javelins back upon themselves, and rais'd so great a Dust as depriv'd them of their Sight, fo that having two E nemies to encounter at once they were quickly overthrown: In the beginning of the Fight Engents

Who should

on

in

R

me

fro

25

not

Fro

Son

Con

felf

cari

wit

exc

had

whi

as C

Mar

ftain

Heig

vind

and '

tor,

fully

very extir

Root

in for prepa

oy t

fatal

Life

ceiv'c

which

ing th

tighte

only

m had promis'd a great Reward to those who should bring him Theodofius alive or dead, thinking it inpossible for him to escape; but now astonish'd at the impetuous Violence of the Tempest, and concluding from thence that they fought against Providence feveral of his Troops despairing of Success went and furrender'd themselves to the Emperor, begging Pardon for their Offence, and swearing an inviolable Loyalty for the future. Theodofius receiv'd 'em into Grace, and order'd 'em to bring Eugenius into his Presence. The Usurper observing some coming in great hafte towards him concluded they brought him News of the Victory, and instantly ask'd if they had not fecur'd Theodofins; they return'd him no Answer, but to his Astonishment bound him and hurry'd him away to the Emperor, who reproach'd him for his Cruelty towards his Master Valentinian, accus'd him for the Calamities he had by the Wat brought upon the Empire, and upbraided him for putting his Confidence in Hercules, in Distrust and Defiance of the only true God; and without waiting for his Answer order'd his Head to be struck off. Arbogastes, whose Conscience told him he had great reason to expect the same Punishment, turn'd his own Executioner, and laid violent Hands upon himfelf; tho' the good Emperor made the same Use of this Victory as he had done of those that preceded, bewaiting the innocent Blood that had been spilt in the War, and as if he himself had been the Author of it, for which reason he abstain'd for some time from participating in the holy Mysteries of the Eucharift. The Children of Eugenius and Flavian had great reason to think they were to suffer for the Rebellion of their Fathers, and therefore betook themfelves to Sanctuary, but by the Intercession of St. Ambrose, who came to Aquileia there to congratulate Theodosius for his late Victory, the Emperor not and beheaded.

Eugenius

taken,

Theodosius his Moderation.

Chap. M. XLVII. Theo. Arcad. Honorius. 227

only pardon'd them, but gave Order to have 'em instructed and confirm'd in the Principles of the true Religion, and to be advanced to honourable Employments in the State; acquiring not fo much Glory from his Success in the Field, as from such Actions as thefe, truly worthy a Christian Prince, never enough to be commended, imitated, and admired. From Aquileia he remov'd to Milan, whither his Son Honorius came, according to his Order, from Constantinople to attend him; for he now found himfelf indisposed, and inclinable to a Droplie, which carry'd him off in a short time after.

d

nd

ng

ble

10-ito

ing

ght

if

ım

and

h'd

an,

Var

for

and ait-

off.

reat

his

im-

e of

led.

t in

hor

ime

Eu-

had

Re-

em-

Am-

ilate

not only

About this time, feveral Countries were shaken with violent Earthquakes, others were drown'd with excessive Rains, attended by so great a Darkness as had not been observed for a long time before; all which the Historians of those times feem to apply s Omens delign'd to usher in the Fall of that great Man, and the Lois the Roman Empire was to fufain in his Death. He was now arriv'd at the Height of Human Happiness, for he had not only vindicated the Imperial Authority from Ulurpation and Tyranny, but exercis'd it without a Competifor, and united it in his own Family. He was faithfully ferv'd by his Subjects, and admir'd by his very Enemies; and tho' he found it impossible to extirpate the Barbarians that had taken too deep a Root within the Roman Pale, yet he repress'd and n lome measure civiliz'd 'em: And now as he was preparing to remove to Constantinople, there to enby the Fruit of his Labours, he was feiz'd with a latal Distemper at Milan, which put an end to his sick, Life and all his future Defigns. As foon as he perterv'd himself to be in Danger he made his Will, in which he made a Division of the Empire, bequeathng the East to his eldest Son Areadins, aged about aghteen Years, and the West to Honorius, who was

Q 2

11

d

21

B

 T_{i}

th

wa

M

Wa

hav

Gir

to 2

nen

fus

mol

him

tho'

lent

this

up t

of th

he w threa

as fro

ture, and I

stian

on at

Relig

any o

they

millio

his S

then almost eleven; recommending the one to Refinus his Care and Direction, and the other to that of Stilicho, who was made General of the Army. He had at the same time eas'd the People of several Impositions, and pardon'd many Criminals; and resigning himself with a chearful Mind to the Will of God, he expir'd at Milan on the 17th of January, after a glorious Reign of sixteen Years, and in the siftieth of his Age according to some, tho others say he liv'd sixty, An. Ur. 1147, the third of the 293d Olympiad, in the Consulship of Olybrius and Probinus, An. Dom. 395. The Reader will easily conclude Theodosius dy'd univerfally lamented, when he confiders that he feem'd fent as a publick Bleffing into the World; and that he was call'd to the Empire when the Necessities of the State requir'd a Person of Experience. Courage, Conduct, and Perseverance. He ow'd much to Fortune, but more to himfelf, and was made Emperor more for the fake of those he was to govern than his own. His Virtues were as great whilst he liv'd a private Life, but became afterward more conspicuous, and as at first he discountenanc'd Vice by his Example, fo he afterwards suppres'di by his Authority; his Modesty at first refus'd that Power which the most deserving of his Predecesson had courted with Ambition, but he made it appear in the Issue that no Man knew how to be Great ber ter than himself. He was a Prince of exemplary Temperance; curious in the choice of his great Officers and Counfellors; just to his Friends, and generous even to his Enemies. In him we may lay were collected all the rare Qualities that were for eminent in the first Romans, he had the Chastness of the Pontifices, the Moderation of the Confuls, th Grandure of the Patricians, and the Meeknels and Humility of the Clients. The Wars he was engage

His Character.

Chap. II. XLVII. Theo. Arcad. Honorius. 229

infit of

He

lm-

gnl of

the hers

the

rins

lyd

he

rld;

Ne-

nce,

W'd

s to reat

ards

nc'd

s'd it

Hor

pea bet

olary

great

200 y fay

re f

es o

and in during his Reign were of other Mens kindling, not his own, and he only by his Courage and Conduct put a stop to what others by their Tyranny and Ambition had begun. How kind a Father he was to the Publick appears in his lessening the Burden of Taxes, and that at a time, according to Themistius, when he had such an Army on Foot as the Roman Empire hardly ever law before, He was Just in his Dealings to all Men, but fond of those that were good, making the Greatness of his Mind appear in his Liberality and Munificence towards 'em. He is faid both in Body and Mind to have refembled Trajan, only Theodofius was more Graceful and Majestick; besides he was a Stranger to Trajan's Vices, such as Drunkenness, Incontinence and Ambition. In this Character of Theodofus all the Heathen Authors of those Times unanimoully agree, except Zozimus, who injuriously taxes him with Incontinency, Sloth and Voluptuousness; tho' at the same time the force of Truth is prevalent in him, when he confesses, that as by Nature this Prince was idle and unactive, giving himfelf up to all manner of Debauchery, when the Affairs of the State left him at leifure for it; so when ever he was call'd upon by any imminent Danger, which threaten'd the Publick Safety, he rouz'd himself s from a Dream, shook off those Vices of his Nature, and went as readily to Work as if Labour and Difficulties had been familiar to him. Chrihian Authors have deservedly commended him upon another Account, his Zeal for the Christian, Religion, in which he equall'd, if not excell'd any of his Glorious Predecessors; many Instances they have given us of his great Care for, and Submillion to the Ordinances of the Church, and of his Spiritual Obedience. Sozomen tells us, that

Q3

whilit

D

by

no

Or

wh

thi

of

pre

the

nati

vati

whilst the Emperor continu'd in Italy after the De. feat of Maximus an Infurrection happen'd at Thes. Calonica, in which the Seditious kill'd Botericas, the Emperor's Lieutenant in Elynicum, and leveral of the Magistrates; that Theodofins being inform'd of it commanded a great number of the Mutineers to be put to Death, but at the Intercellion of St. Abutrafe he revoked his Orders, and pardon'd them. Some time after several of the Great Men in his Court represented to him, that the Thessalonians had been encouraged to this Sedition by his too great Indah gence shown to those at Antioch, and upon many other Occasions; and that if he permitted em to go unpunish'd, his Officers for the future would be in continual Danger of their Lives, and that he would be constantly alarm'd with some new Commotions. The Emperor was fenfibly affected with this Remonstrance, and instantly dismiss'd some of his Troops to Theffalonica, where in three Days time they cruelly massacred above seven thousand People, without regard either to Age, Sex or Condition, murdering the Innocent as well as Guilty. At this time an Affembly of Bishops was held at Milan, who all express'd how much they abhorr'd fo excessive a Severity in the Prince. Whereupon St. Ambrose writ a Letter to Theodosius, in which, with a Confidence no ways injurious to the Respect he ow'd his Soveraign, he represented to him the Enormity of his Crime, and exhorted him to make an Attonement by a fincere Submission and Repentance. The Emperor being arriv'd at Milan, was going to perform his Devotions in the great Church, into which St. Ambrose deny'd him Entrance, till he had expiated fo Publick a Crime by as Publick a Penance. To this the Emperor readily submitted, and return'd to his Palace with Tears in his Eyes,

De-

of

be

rofe

me

urt

and go be ith

of

ays and

onlty.

at rrd

DOI

ich,

ect

the nake

en-

was ch,

till

lick

nit-

his yes,

Eyes, and a Heart full of Divine Contrition, and perform'd with a most Christian Submission all the Duties of an open Penance, as they were enjoin'd by the Ganons of the Church, and the Customs of those Times; and to make the Empire an Honourable Amends for his Fault, he then publish'd, or at least enforc'd the Observance of an Edict, by which all Criminals were to have a Respite of thirty Days allow'd 'em, between the pronouncing of the Sentence and the Execution, and thereby prevented both himself and his Successors from falling into the like Error for the future. I have given the Reader this fignal Example of a Divine Refignation, and leave him to make what useful Observations he thinks fit upon it. where the said that the state of the forest state ten microsoft affect en a la santa Libraria de la comunitar manufacts resulted by a serious doors killered:

son but men and the manager of the second of the

to the contract of the contrac out the word in the Standard Standards in contract day the sing tent to engineering the constitution of W. salon Vision of the State of the State

v. on the specific plans the month of the conor description to the commence to any

Probable of the control of the contr to motorial and management to the cost

The Visit Blow of the Strate Strate Strate

are com the role of the fifth of went to on a dien Mine to be been all the

and an information of the language of the land the second of the same space to be required Q4 CHAP.

ha

ha to

CO th

pal inc

So

to the

the Co

felv

of t

or p Val

der'

Pric he l

the

mov

whi

read ter t

Law him

by f

Arca Difc

to hi

as E

a Per

Diving

CHAP. III.

From the Death of Theodosius the Great, to the Taking of Rome the first time by the Goths. the state of the s Containing the Space of almost Sixteen Years.

I. THE World can never difcern the Worth of a Prince fufficiently 'till they have loft him, of which the Roman Empire was too fensible after the Death of Theodosius. The Subject of the remaining Part of this History will be the Decay and Ruin of the greatest State that ever gave Laws to the rest of the World, and the Reader must now behold the Roman Common-wealth struggling in Death, oppress'd by her own Slaves, and over-power'd by those she at first arrogantly contemn'd.

Theodosius, as we observ'd before, unhappily divided the Empire at his Death between his two Sons, who being too Young to govern of themfelves were committed to the Care and Direction of fuch, who apply'd their Power more to the gratefying their own private Interest and Ambition, than to the Honour and Safety of the Empire. Areadius, immediately after his Father's Death, repair'd to Constantinople, lest the People should affect any dangerous Change upon the News of fo general a Calamity, where he iffu'd out several Edicts for the Confirmation of such Laws as had been pub-The Ambi. lish'd by Theodosius against the Hereticks and Hea-tion of Ru- thens. In the mean time Rusinus and Stilicho, out finus and of Envy to each others Greatness, grew such imprejudicial placable Enemies, that in Profecution of their feve to the Em_ ral pernicious Projects they confounded all things pire.

Chap.III. XLVIII. Arcadius, Honorius. 233

1

t,

by 仙

75.

al.

of

m, ter

re-

ay

WS

OW in

W-

di-

WO

em

nof

rati han

reair d

any ral a

for oublea-

out

IM-

eveings

VIDE

Divine and Human, and feem'd to rend that Empire afunder, which Theodosius design'd only to have divided. By this means the Barbarians, who had been receiv'd into the Empire, were invited to make use of so favourable an Advantage, and began to think of fetting up for themselves, of becoming Conquerors inflead of Subjects, of sharing the Provinces amongst them, and erecting Principalities of their own. Arcadius and Honorius were indeed honour'd with the Imperial Titles, but the Sovereign Power rested solely in Stiliche and Russnus, the one Commanding at his Pleasure in the East, and the other in the West. They undertook to determine all Suits and Controversies, which they did with a most Arbitrary Partiality, drawing the Wealth of whole Provinces into their own Coffers, and impoverishing Nations to enrich themfelves. The Princes all this while were ignorant of their Practices, approving whatfoever they did or propos'd, which carry'd with it the Strength and Validity of a Law. Rufinus in a short time render'd himself odious to the People through his Pride and Arrogance. From an obscure Beginning he had been rais'd to the greatest Employments in the State, so that he began to think himself remov'd but one Step from the Imperial Dignity, to which he had a great Defire to attain, and the readiest way he thought was to marry his Daughter to Arcadius; for being the Emperor's Father-in-Law he concluded he could do no less than assume him for his Collegue. The Overtures were made by some of his Instruments with great Secrecy to Arcadius, which however by degrees became the Discourse of the People, and increas'd their Aversion to him; but none oppos'd his Designs so effectually as Entropins, one of the Emperor's Eunuchs, and Eutropius Person in great Esteem with him. Promotus left opposes Rutwo finus.

0

E

h

P

an

fre

th

ch

inc

for 201

the

the

his

my

the

Eft that

Wi

alik

his end

dear

as h fign

than

thou

coul

mad

gene

two Sons behind him, who in Theodofius his Life.

time were brought up with his own Children, one of which had at present a Virgin in his Family of extraordinary Beauty; some say she was Gratian's Daughter, others that the was the Daughter of Banto, who had been Conful with Arcadins; this Lady Entropius upon all occasions commended to the Emperor, extolling her in a high degree as the most perfect Workmanship of Nature, and so far prevail'd that he consented to marry her. Rufinus was just return'd to Constantinople from Antioch, where he had given the World a new Instance of his Cruelty and Ingratitude. Florentius, who had been Prafectus Pratorio in Julian's Reign, had a Son call'd Lucian; this Gentleman made his Court to Rufinus, prefenting him with Possessions of a very confiderable Value, upon which account Rufnus recommended him to the Emperor, who made him Comes of the East, in which Office he behavid himself with the greatest Justice and Moderation, and was fo far from being a Respecter of Perfons, that he rejected a Proposal made to him by the Emperor's own Uncle Eucherius, in which he requir'd fomething that was not fit for him to grant; whereupon Eucherius complain'd of him to the Emperor, who reproach'd Rufinus for impoling to unworthy a Man upon him. Rufinus, instead of protecting one who had purchas'd his Friendship at fo great a Price, communicating his Thoughts to a very few made hafte to Antioch, where he enterd in the Night time, apprehended Lucian, and withos Cruelty. out any Accuser commanded him to make his Defence; he order'd him to be beaten on the Neck with Leaden Balls 'till he expir'd under the Torment, and then put him into a close Litter, endeavouring to persuade the People that he was still alive, and might expect some Favour at his Hands; but

Chap. III. XLVIII. Arcadius, Honorius. 235

ď

8

13

te

ne

145

of

ad Sig.

Irt

ve-

of-

be-

deer-

by

he

nt; the

fo ot

p at

to a

er d ith-

De-

Jeck or-

dea-

11 4-

ndss

but

but they being too sensible of the Truth highly releated to barbarous a Proceeding: Rufinus, to appeafe 'em, built 'em a most magnificent Portico, and so gave the City at once an Instance of his Cruelty and Prodigality; and from thence he return'd to Constantinople, pleasing himself with the Thoughts of his future Affinity with the Emperor, and the Establishment of his own unlimited Power, but he had not been long there, before he found the Emperor by Entropins his means marry'd to Endoxia, marry'd to and himfelf disappointed of his airy Imaginations. This he was refolv'd to revenge upon Eutropius, and from hence forward he labour'd to possess himself of that Power by Treason, which he could not purchale by his Intrigues, to which he was the more incited by Stilicho's fuccessful Attempts in the West, for he had not only marry'd his Daughter to Honorius, but had the Command of the Flower of the Reman Army dispos'd in Garrison up and down the best Cities, which by that means were all at his Devotion; for being Captain-General of the Army at Theodofius his Death, he referved the best of the Troops to himself, and dismiss'd those of less Estimation into the East. Rufinus was inform'd that Stiliche had the Preference in Theodosius his Will, that he was left Governor to both his Sons alike, and was coming into the East to make use of his Authority accordingly. This Journey Rufinus Rufinus endeavour'd by all means possible to prevent, en- his treadeavouring at the same time to weaken, as much Practices. as he could, the Forces of Arcadins; in these Defigns he was affifted, by Instruments more wicked than he could have expected or defir'd. Rufinus thought it would be much to his Advantage if he could let the Barbarians into Greece, and therefore made Antiochus Governor of it, a Man basely degenerating from the Virtue and Integrity both of

I

21

m

fe

th

ne

th

th

do

clu

the

WI

wh

pir

der

Vie

ger

25 1

tho

ror

by.

wer

the

Cor

had

pror

his Father and his Brethren; at the same time he deliver'd the Straits of Thermopyle into the Custo dy of Gerontius, who he was fure would fecond him in any villanous Attempts upon the Common-Alarich had all this while the Command of the Barbarians, employ'd by Theodofine against the Usurper Eugenius. Rufinus observ'd him to be of an Unquiet, Seditious Temper, Haughry and Impetuous, and at present dissatisfy'd, for that he had been rewarded with no better Preferment. He therefore fends privately to him, and advices him to be his own Carver; he encourages him to draw together those of his own Country, and all such of any other Nation as would follow his Fortunes, and march boldly at the Head of 'em, affuring him he should meet with no Opposition.

His Dealings with Alarich the Goth, who marches into Greece,

In Confidence of this Promise Alarich quits Thrace, and marches into Macedonia and Thefal, destroying all the Country as he march'd, and coming near to Thermopyla, by Messengers he inform'd Gerontius and Antiochus of his Approach. Gerontius, according to his Instructions, immediately withdrew his Guards from the Straits, and lo open'd a free Passage for the Barbarians into Greece, where they rag'd with unexampl'd Fury, killing all the Males that were able to oppose 'em, and driving away the Boys and Women in great Numbers, together with the Wealth of the Country, which fell all into their Hands. All Bæotia, and those other Parts of Greece that felt their Fury, wore the Marks of it for a long time after. They pierc'd into Argos, Corinth and Lacedemon, rifling the Temples and pillaging all the wealthy Cities, which were unfortify'd through the Avarice of the Roman Magistrates, who were ready to serve the Lust and Ambition of those who were in Power, tho'at the Expence of their own Country. These Proceedings of the Barbarians ferv'd to feed the Ambition of Rufinus, who hop'd to succeed better in his Designs upon the Empire, whilst it labour'd under such Publick Calamities; but Stilicho, who as yet had Stilicho more generous Thoughts, and was intent upon the marches Preservation of the Common-wealth, having first the East. repress'd the Franks, the Suevi, and the Germans, who were aiming at some Commotions in the West, and thereby quieted all behind him, resolv'd to march to the Succour of Achaia. Accordingly he fet forward with the Western Troops, and those of the East that had been left in Italy ever fince the Defeat of Eugenius, and landing fafe in Peloponnesus, was in a fair way of ruining the Barbarians. The whole Army express'd a great Forwardness for the Expedition, and earnestly desir'd to come to an Engagement with them, and revenge the Miferies they had brought upon the Empire; which without doubt they had effected, had not Rufinus, who concluded that when once the Barbarians were repress'd the Storm would fall upon his own Head, prevail'd with Arcadius to fend for the Oriental Troops for the Defence of Constantinople, and restrain the Hunns, who by the like Artifices had broken into the Empire. Stilicho was extreamly furpriz'd at this Order, which he thought depriv'd him of a certain Victory, and put the Empire into imminent Dan-The Chief Commanders in the Army were as much concern'd as their General, however they thought fit to march in Obedience to the Empefor's Orders, which they were fensible Rufinus had by his Artifices procur'd, on whom therefore they were refolv'd to be reveng'd, as on an Enemy to the State; and fo they fet forward under the Conduct of Gaines, a great Friend of Stilicho's, who had promis'd him to remove his Antagonist, and promote his Interest in the East. About this time Theodosius

W

of

uts

nd

inch.

AEC:

fo

ece,

all

ing

to-

ich

ole

the.

nto

ples

un-

Ma-

and

the

ings

ot

tan to

ter

lut

Ro

we

tro

De

his

to fun

W

crif

in a

mif

the

Fav

and

Cru

litie

Wic

and

gard

ent t his I

ed to

Affa

him

all th

Swa

Prac

time

in m

Hon

befor

Barg

confi

1

Theodosius his Corps was brought from Mitten to Constantinople, where he was bury'd with more So. lemnity of Grief than Pomp of State, the Ceremony ferving to remind the People of what they had loft, and the defenceless Condition of the Empire. Rufinus had a great many brave Troops at his Do votion, commanded by Persons of the first Quality, who had conspir'd to proclaim him Emperor immediately upon the Arrival of that out of the Well: The Purple was prepar'd, and the Donative ready for the Soldiers, who fuffer themselves too often to be corrupted by Presents. Gaines being come at the Head of his Army within a few Hours March to Constantinople, gave Arcadius notice of his Approach, and that pursuant to his Orders he was come to his Relief; of this the Emperor was highly fatiffy'd, and was pleas'd to go out of the City and meet the Soldiers in Person, being inform'd 'twas an Honour his Predecessors usually paid to the Army. The Soldiers receiv'd him with the Respect due to his Dignity, but upon a Signal given by Gaines they surrounded Rufinus, whose Thoughts were puffed up with imaginary Empire, and cut him in pieces; this Head was fix'd upon the top of a Lance, and expos'd to the View of the People, who abominated him for his excessive Cruelty and Extorte on, and therefore beheld it with much Satisfaction: They were well pleas'd at the Invention of a certain Soldier, who took his right Hand, and by a witty Contrivance opening and closing his Fingers at pleasure, went up and down the City begging an Alms for that infatiable Creature. Thus fell Ruft nus, who well deserv'd the Usage he receiv'd, has ving by his Ambition involv'd the Publick in great Difficulties, and procur'd the Ruin of many private Families. The Hunns and the Goths, who had been let into the Empire by his Means, could never af-

Rufinus

Chap.III. XLVIII. Arcadius, Honorius. 239

grew up by Degrees to such a Strength and Resolution, that at first they shook off the Yoke of the Romans, and at last brought 'em into Subjection, as we shall see hereaster. Upon Rusinus his Death Eutropius, who had concurr'd with Stilicho in all his Devices against him, was made chief Minister in his Room; securing the greatest Part of his Estate to his own use, but giving others Liberty to reassume what had been unjustly taken from 'em. His Wise and Children, searing they should fall a Sacrifice to the Fury of the People, took Sanctuary in a Church, from whence by the Emperor's Permission they retir'd to ferusalem, where they spent the rest of their Days.

0

t

ſ.

11

1e

is

y d

c,

0-u.

n:

er-

ers

20 ofic

12-

eat

ate

en

af-

rds

Entropius being thus confirm'd in his Master's Favour, fucceeded Rufinus not only in his Power Eutropius and his Employments, but what is worse in his as bad as Cruelty, his Avarice, and his other villanous Qualities, fo that Rufinus feem'd still to survive in this. wicked Eunuch. He was a declar'd Enemy to Virtue and virtuous Men; nor had he any farther Regard to Religion than as he could make it subservient to his Interest. He abus'd with much Infolence his Master's Power, who being young, and addicted to his Pleasures, resign'd the Government of his Affairs into his Hands. And the better to confirm himself in his Authority, he endeavour'd to remove all those out of the way, who seem'd to bear any Sway in the Court. For this end he began his Practices upon Timafius, a Man who had been a long time a principal Commander in the Army, and had in many Wars ferv'd the Government with much Honour, Courage and Integrity. Being some time before this at Sardis he accidentally met with one Bargus, a Native of Laodicea in Syria, a mean inconfiderable Person, and who for some notorious Crime

Crime had been forc'd to fly his Country; Timafius perceiving him of a facetious infinuating Converfation, without ever enquiring farther into his Character, admitted him to his Familiarity, preferr'd him to the Command of a Cohort, and took him with him to Constantinople; at which some of the Magistrates were highly displeas'd, because he had been formerly banish'd that City for some Offences This Man Eutropius thoughta committed by him. fit Instrument for his Villany, and with many Gifts and more Promises persuaded him to accuse Timasus of High-Treason. Hereupon the Villain counterfeits a Writing, in the Contents of which Timafius is charg'd with affecting the Imperial Dignity, and is therefore brought without delay to his Trial, where the Emperor himself presided first as Judge; but finding the People dislik'd the Proceeding, and were offended to see a Person of Timasius his Dignity forc'd to answer the mercenary Accusations of so infignificant and scandalous a Rascal, he quitted the Employment, and substitutes Saturninus and Procopins in his room. Saturninus was an ancient Man, and had gone through many great Offices, but was given to Flattery, and in the Court of Judicature to pass such Sentences; as were likely to please those who were in greatest Favour with the Prince. Procopius had been Valens his Father-in-Law, and was rigid and inflexible, pretending to have a great Regard to Right and Equity; as indeed he appear'd in this Case, for he endeavour'd to convince Saturninus how unreasonable a thing it was, that a Man to notorious as Bargus should be suffer'd to accuse so great a Person as Timasius, and after he had been oblig'd in fo extraordinary a manner; endeavour to betray and destroy his Benefactor. However Saturninus his Sentence prevail'd in the End, notwithstanding this reasonable Remonstrance; and Timasius

Was

e

n

01

T

ab

of

fre

to

th

th

Re

and

gre

his

RS

cor

the

opp

whe

Cor

cuf

bro

con

thof

Law

unre

and in al

mati

erha

r'd

im

the

add

ces

at a ifts

fists

er-

fins

and ial,

ge;

and

01-

fo

the

- 000

an;

Was

ure

ofe

070-

Was

Re-

ar'd

MY-Man

cuse

een

r to

tur-

ith-

afinis

W25

was confin'd to Oasis, a barren uncomfortable Place. out of which there could be no Escape for those who were once brought thither; for it was furrounded with a large desolate Defart full of Sand, which moving to and fro with the Wind fuffer'd no Tract or Footstep of any former Travellers to be seen : Timasius being thus remov'd, a Report was spread abroad that his Son Syagrius, affilted by a Company of Robbers, had intercepted him and forc'd him from the Guards, who were fent by the Emperor to conduct him to his Place of Exile. Whether this Report was true, or rais'd by some of Entropiw's Creatures, is uncertain, tho' neither the Father nor Son were heard of ever after.

Bargus received the Command of a Cohort, as a Reward for his extraordinary Service to Entropius, and was deceiv'd with the Hopes and Promises of greater things, not thinking that his Treachery to his great Benefactor Timasius, would teach Eutropiis to be upon his Guard, and deal with him accordingly; this his fenfeless Security drew upon him the Judgment he deferv'd, for Eutropius taking an opportunity of his Absence, persuaded his Wife, who was then at variance with her Husband, to prelent the Emperor with some Papers of dangerous Confequence, and among the rest many heavy Acculations against Bargus; whereupon Eutropius Bargus put brought him instantly to his Trial, where he was to death by convicted, sentenced and executed accordingly. So his Procertain is the hand of Justice to punish, first or last, curement. those who are guided by no Rule, nor observe any Law that interferes with their private Interest, how unreasonably soever grounded or pursued:

And now Entropius, intoxicated with Power, and arrogant through his Success, employs his Spies mall Quarters and in every Corner, by whole Informations he made his own Advantage, oppressing thoje A. D. 396.

Eutropius - ł

1

fe

W

in fu

Pr

fu

di

re

ny

up

nai

zil

Ra

had

flar

and

fin

Sin

we

en'

abr

all

and

fo f

tain

fone

those who were considerable for their Authority, or confpicuous for their Estates, and excluding such

Who gets Abundantius to be banish d, from the Presence of the Emperor, who had the Courage to tell him how much he was abus'd. A. mong these was Abundantius, a Man considerable in the Common-wealth in Gratian's time, and who had been Prætor and Conful under Theodofius. His Virtue, Experience, and Authority, were Qualifications no way agreeable to Entropins, fo that he prevail'd, through his crafty Infinuations with the Emperor, to have him stripp'd of his Honours and E. state, and confin'd to Sidon in Phanicia, where he dy'd. After this he found none in Constantinople able to dispute or rival his Power, and so was more at leifure to turn his Eyes towards the West, where he observ'd Stilicho governing with an unlimitted Authority, belov'd by the Emperor, carefs'd by the Soland practi- diers, and inclinable to come to Constantinople, which it confifted with his Interest to prevent, and therefore he persuaded Arcadius to summon the Senate, ses against Stilicho.

Gildo refrick;

in which Stilicho is declar'd a publick Enemy to the Empire. After which he fo far practis'd upon Gilvolts in A- do, who was Governor in Africk, that he renounced his Obedience to Honorius, owning Arcadius for his Soveraign, or rather fetting up for himfelf; reftraining that Supply of Corn with which Rome us'd to be furnish'd, and thereby creating a great Scarcity in that populous City. This Gildo, as we observed before, was one of the Sons of Nubel, who whilft he liv'd was a potent Prince in Mauritania. In the time of his Brother Firmus his Rebellion Gildo stuck fast to the Romans, for whom he appear'd so zealous that Theodosius, as a Recompence for his Services, conferr'd many Honours upon him, and made him his Lieutenant in Africk. For some time he behav'd himself with much Respect and Obedience to the Empire, but finding it embroil'd upon Engenins his

e

d

1e-

n-

.

ne

2-

at ae

1-

d-

e-

te,

he d-

d

115

D-

to

ty

r'd

Ht

lie

ıck

ous

ces,

im

be-

to

ins

his

A.D.

397.

his Usurpation, he declin'd joining the Forces under his Command with Theadefins, and began then to entertain thoughts of a Revolts but after his Death, prefuming upon the Incapacity of his Sons, he strick in with Eutropius, and made himself ablolute Mafter of Africk. Gilde had then a Brother, call'd Mazefeel or Mazezil, who oppos'd him with fo much Activity, that he was violently enrag'd against him, and had a Deligo upon his Life; upon which Mazezil fled into haly, where he gave the Emperor and Stilicho a just Account of the Province, inform'd'em of the readiest way to suppress the Ufurper, and offer dto undertake the Service himlelf, provided they would place him at the Head of a fufficient Army. The Emperor had great reason to distrust this Barbarian's Sincerity, but the City was reduc'd to fuch a Scarcity of Provisions through the Rebellion in Africk, that he was glad to embrace any Offer that was propos'd to extinguish it. Whereupon the Wat was declar'd against Gildo in the Senate, and committed to the Management of Maze- against zil. Of this when Gildo was inform'd, he in great Brother is Rage murder'd two of his Brother's Sons, whom he fent. had left behind in Africk; which ferv'd only to inflame his Brother with more Animosity against him, and to profecute the War with greater Application, fince to his Rebeltion he had added the unnatural Sin of Paricide.

In the mean time the People of Rome, tho' they were afflicted with a Famine at home, and threaten'd with great and almost unavoidable Dangers from abroad, in a fenfeles Security gave themselves up to all manner of Luxury and Prodigality. The Goths, and other Barbarous Nations, were by degrees grown fo familiar to 'em, many of whom they had entertain'd within their own Walls, that they became fond of their Fashions, and began to imitate 'emin

R 2

(

2

716

an

CU

tro

op

and

at

me

the

wa

Se

no

hig

tur

to

for

Co

bar

COL

tine

and

foo

he

Me

of

Vag

ten'

froi

Sea,

Te

their Dreffes, thinking their own dull and unpolite. ed: This was looked upon as a fatal Prelude to followed not long after; for 'tis almost a certain fign that that Nation will in time be subjected to those of whole Fancies they are fond; and that they to whose Imaginations they submit their Reason, will in time become Masters both of their Persons and Estates. This Extravagance was attended by another altogether as unreasonable; they were infatuated with a Madness of Building, and that at a time when the City was already grown too great for the Inhabitants, and the Inhabitants too many for the Provisions that were brought to it. Both thefe Extragavances Honorius endeavour'd to restrain by two several Edicts, but to little purpose, for the still perfisted in their Imitation of the Barbarians and the humour of Building continu'd fo long, 'till the City her felf flid down from her feven Hills, and repos'd her felf, as for ease, in the Campus Martius.

The Death of St. Ambrofe.

This Year was remarkable for a Council held at Carthage, wherein were framed feveral Remarkable Canons, by which we may judge of the pious and felf-denying Temper of the Prelates that celebrated In the fame Year dy'd St. Ambrofe, Bishop of Milan, who is accus'd of some Doctrinal Errors; whereby we are to know that the best of Men are not infallible; for he maintain'd, as well as St. Hilary, that all Men indifferently are to undergo a fiery Trial at the last Day; that even the Just are to pass through it, and be thereby cleansed from their Sins; but the Unjust are to continue in it for ever. He likewise taught, that the Faithful should be rais'd gradually at the last Day, according to the Degree of their particular Merits: That the Bow God promis'd Noah be would place in the Firmament after the Deluce, as a Token that he never intended to drown the World again,

was

Chap.III. XLVIII. Arcadius, Honorius. 245

was not to be understood of the Rain-bow, which can never appear in the Night, but some visible Virtue of the Almighty; and several other Tenets, wherein he differ d from the rest of the Orthodox Fathers, and which afterwards gave occasion to many Spend

10-

131

ne

he

he

efe by ey ns,

il

B.

tr-

ole

nd

ed

of

s;

y, al gb be

ſe

at

u-

be

4

The Year following Honorius was Conful the A. D. fourth time with Entychianus: And Stiliche and Entropius, who had hitherto appear'd publickly to be in good Terms with each other, now broke out into open Enmity, agreeing still however in pillaging and oppressing the Publick. All Employments were at their Disposal, the Power of Pardon and Punishment rested solely in them, so that all Men became their Courtiers and Dependants. At this no Man was more offended than Gaines, who thought his Services little regarded, his Person neglected, and none preferr'd but those who were able to pay the highest price for it. These Considerations made him turn Male-content, so that he began to think of raising new Commotions, and communicated his Thoughts turns Maleto one Tribigila, a bold couragious Soldier, fit for any desperate Undertaking. Tribigild had the Command of some Troops of Horse of the Barbarians that lay Quarter'd in Phrygia, and having concerted his Matters with Gaines, he left Constantinople under a Pretence of Multering his Troops, and viewing the Condition they were in; but as foon as he had plac'd himself at the Head of 'em he laid all the Country waste before him, killing Tribigild Men, Women and Children, and upon a Promise Rebels. of free Booty got fuch a Company of pilfering Vagabonds together, that all Afia feem'd to be threaten'd with Destruction. Lydia was in an Uproar, from whence the Inhabitants drew downtowards the Sea, and pass'd over into other Parts to avoid the Tempest they saw ready to break upon 'em. Arz

cadins

Co the fud much

m

ab

OI

of

fri

E

aff

fy

ing

A

to ing

do

Co

Ga Ph he

har

had

eaf hav

ble the

out

Wa Co

Ho

my Cit

ирс

Th

cadius being inform dof all this had no Sense of the Publick Calamities, nor Discretion enough to remove fem. but like a Helplels unactive Prince re figured affect the Management of Entropins, who made Choice of Gaines and Lee for the Generals of the War, by whose Conduct and Fidelity he made no doubt but Tribigild would quickly be reduced. Les had Orders to march into Afin, and differed the Barbarians that were met in a confus'd manner together; and Gaines was to have an Eye upon Thruce and the Straits of the Hellespons, to preven any trruptions on that fide. Thus was the Empe ror fhamefully abus'd, and the Empire cruelly afflicted by open and avow'd Enemies that wen fworn to her Destruction, and by treacherous, onskilfal Generals, who undertook the Care of her Defence, for Leo had no other Qualification that could was rant his Pretence to fo high an Employment, but his Intimacy with Entropius; and Gaines, by Birth and Inclination was an avow'd Enemy to the Ri man State. However they both march'd from Con stantinople according to their Instructions, and Gaines, pursuant to the Agreement between 'en, fent and advis'd Tribigila to draw with his Forces down towards the Hellespone. Had this Delign been as warily executed, as it was cunningly fuggetted, all Asia and the East must unavoidably have been lost, but Fortune had not yet totally abandon'd the Roman Common-wealth. He left Constantinople with a Heat and Impetuolity natural to Barbarians, and fent not his Advice to Tribigild 'till he was are riv'd at Heracles, and then Tribigild was afraid to observe his Orders, lest he should fall in with the Forces that were by that time fent to Guard the Coast; so that having wasted all Phrygia, he fell with the same Barbarity upon Pisidia. The Inhabitants sent to Gaines for Relief, which he with much Artifice, prolong'd fending, whilst Leo hover'd about the Hellespane without daring to encounter the Enemy, who ravag'd the Country at Discretion, roving up and down without meeting the least Opposition, being daily reinforc'd by some or other of his Countrymen, who instead of defending their friendly Neighbours, the Romans, join'd with their Enemies, and drew their Swords against 'em.'

いっとなるしん いっぱんし はんちゃるまとんし

d

54

Gaines pretended all this while to be highly exasperated against him, but at the same time magnify'd his Stratagems and Sagacious Conduct, affirming he effected more by that than the Force of his Arms. He pass'd over into Asia with a Pretence to oppose and chastise him, but was so far from doing any thing that tended that way, that he fate down as a Spectator whilst Tribigild laid all the Country waste, and burnt the Cities about him. Gaines expected he would have march'd out of Phrygia, and have mov'd towards the East, to which he privately advis'd him, and affifted him underhand with fome Forces for the Expedition. Indeed had Tribigild directed his Course into Lydia he had easily master'd Ionia, and from thence he might have pass'd over into the Islands with as considerable a Fleet as he pleas'd, and so have over-run all the East, and have march'd up as far as Egypt without any Opposition. But directing his Course towards Pamphylia, he fell into a craggy mountainous Country, where there was no Possibility for his Horse to march. There indeed he found no Army to oppose him, but met with one Valentine, a Citizen of Selga, a small Town in Pamphylia, situate upon a Hill, who had rais'd a Body of Slaves and Countrymen, that by their frequent Disputes with the Robbers of those Parts had learn'd how to make fudden Onfets, and frame advantageous Ambushes. These Men Valentine plac'd upon such Hills as R 4 were

Cha were near the Passage, and so dispos'd em with the the (best Skill he had, that they with ease and unce Am By 1

> Trib and

his I

Fur

1 in gi

bigil

en'd

tow

pref

fit 1 befo

bigil able

Def

MS,

and mor for 1

was

his

acq

nor who

Alu

Der

that lam

He

of ! nati

Th

fift

thi

ferv'd could behold all that came that way. A

His Army cut off.

foon as they faw Tribigild was enter'd the Straits, with huge Stones tumbled down from the Mountains they kill'd great Numbers of his Men; and now hen began to find his Error too late, and that he had no room left him to escape; for on one hand was a deep Lake and rotten Bogs, on the other a narrow Ascent in which two Men could scarce move a-breast, call'd Cochlea by the Inhabitants, from the Orbicular Shape of it; this Pass was guarded by one Florentius, who had Men enough to make it good against the Barbarians; however Tribigila, by the Force of his Presents, got leave to pass with three hundred of his Men, the rest of his Army being lost either in the Straits, or the adjoining Lake. From hence he descended into the Plain, where he was reduc'd to greater Extremities than ever; for all the Inhabitants of the Country got together, and with fuch Weapons as they found thut him and his Followers up between the two Rivers, Melane and Eurymedon; from hence, in great perplexity, he fent to acquaint Gaines with the Condition of his Affairs, who was as much troubl'd at it as himfelf; but having not yet openly declar'd himfelf, he fent Leo, who lay near him, with Orders to affift the Pamphilians in Conjunction with Valentine, and hinder Tribigila from passing the Rivers. who was more a Fool than a Knave, punctually follow'd his Instructions, and by that means made Gaines his Tribigild's Escape utterly impossible; whereupon Treachery. Gaines sent time after time such Cohorts of Barbari-ans as he had in his Camp to Leo's Affiftance, as he pretended, and to reinforce his Army; but his Orders to them were, to kill such of the Roman as they found straggling from the Camp, to lay waste

the

the Country, and by degrees destroy Leo and his Army, which the Barbarians executed accordingly. By this means the Country was entirely ruin'd, and Tribigila had leifure to withdraw out of Pamphylia, and return into Phrygia, where he made good Gaines his Design and Expectation, for he rag'd with greater Fury than ever.

ith

ins he ad

was

ar-

he

by u

by

ith

ny

ke. he

all

nd ene

ey,

m-

he

AA

ind

ea,

de

on

11-1

he Ir-

25

le

he

The Emperor, being thus abus'd on every fide, was in great Perplexity. Gaines, instead of reducing Tribigild, magnify'd his Exploits to the Emperor, threaten'd him and the Senate with his intended March towards the Hellespont, which would endanger the present Posture of Affairs, unless the Prince thought fit to incline to his Proposals; those Proposals had before-hand been concerted between him and Tribigild, and were fuch as, when granted, would enable him the better to profecute his own Ambitious Deligns. He was an inveterate Enemy to Eutropim, who being delign'd Conful this Year in the East, and honour'd with the Title of Patrician, he was more exasperated at his Preferment, than offended for that he was not advanc'd himself, and therefore was refolv'd to be fatisfy'd with nothing less than his Death. Accordingly whilst he lay in Phrygia he acquainted the Emperor, that he had neither Strength nor Authority enough to oppose Tribigild any longer, whose Conduct and Experience was such that all Asia would of necessity be lost, unless he had his Demands granted him; the chief of which was, that Eutropius, the grand Author of all the late Calamities, might be deliver'd up into his Hands. Hereupon Arcadins immediately stripp'd Entropius of his Power and Digney, who in great Conster-nation fled for Refuge to a Christian Church. This was not enough to fatisfie Gaines, who still infilted, that Tribigila would be contented with nothing less than Entropins his utter Ruin; so that he

A. D.

us put to Death.

was first banish'd to the Isle of Cyprus, and some after brought to Panychium, where, after a l Trial, he was put to Death.

Tho' Europeus in a great measure owid h to Gaines his inveterate Malice, yet his is Carriage to the Empress had made Arcadias from an indulgent Master become an offended P Looking on himself as the great Instrument Promotion, he thought he might make more with her than consisted with his Duty and her perial Dignity. Among other Extravagances prefumptuously threaten'd her one Day, upon fe fmall Diflike, to turn her out of the Palace, and her home; the Empress, highly offended at the unufual Arrogance, went with Tears in her E and her two little Daughters, Pulcheria and Arcadi in her Arms, and complain'd of the Euruch to the Emperor; who immediately deprive him of his Wealth and Dignities, and banished him in pras, or more easily liften'd to Gaines, and coulested to his Ruin. Whatever the main Reasons of his Fall were, he met with a Fate common to those infolent Favourites, who being advanc'd by the Indulgence of the Prince, shamefully abuse his Power, and misapply his Favours.

We took notice before of Gildo's Revolt in Africk, and how his Brother was fent by the Emperorand Senate of Reme against him, who put an end to the War much sooner than was expected; for Orofins tells us, that depending more upon the Di vine Affiltance, than the Strength of his own Arms, he invok'd the Name of Christ, who supported him Gildo o. in the Day of Battel, and gave him a miraculous verthrown. Victory; for he had not above five thousand Men, tho' Gildo was above feventy thousand strong. Zozimus faith Mazezil fell upon his Brother unawares and after a sharp Dispute defeated him; that prefently (enti than by Obe ceiv

Ch

WATE ate for drov

Wer War he li

Profit grace Brot

VEFY ing 1 vour

Afric noris

Prov all'd A

ome Cour ducte than o

tus, a Eloq lity a

Eutro 1 Sac

the M the F with

hore 1 pre

ently after Gilds choff tather to Strangle himfelf, than fall into his Enemy's Hands. Mazezil having this Victory reduced Africk to Honorius his Obedience, return'd into Italy, where he was receiv'd very favourably by the Emperor, and outwardly carefs'd by Stilisho, in Confideration of his he Services who however inwardly envy'd him for his great Defeats, and procured him to be drown'd not long after. The Death of Gildo dewor'd Africk from great Oppressions, which the War would of necessity have brought upon it, had heliv'd to have receiv'd the Affistance he had been momis'd by Entropins, who was not yet in Difgrace; but the Disagreement between the two Brothers feem'd an Act of Providence, and prov'd very advantageous to Honorius his Affairs, reveneing upon the Usurper the Differtions he endeayour'd to create between the two Emperors. With Africa all Gilde's Paternal Dominions fell to Honorius his share, and was so large, that as a distinct Province it was govern'd by its proper Officer, call'd Comes Gildoniaci Patrimonii.

After this the Western Empire feem'd to enjoy ome Repose, and the Year following, whither the Course of the Wars in the East have already conducted us, is diffinguish'd with the Name of no more than one Conful, which was Flavins Mallius Theodorus, a Person Eminent in those Days for his Learning. Eloquence and good Manners, as well as his Qualty and Fortune; 'tis true we observ'd before that Europine was design'd for his Collegue, but fell Sacrifice either to the Emperor's Indignation, or the Malice of Geines, before he was vefted with the Honour. Gaines was fo far from being fatisfy'd with his Death, that he still aim'd at greater and nore dangerous Innovations. Having concluded pretended Peace with Tribigild in the Emperor's Name,

of

ole

In-

ver,

ick.

to 0-

Die

ms, him

ous

lep,

Zo

res,

Bre-

ntly

Name, he return'd through Phrygia and Lydia ving Tribigild to follow close after him, who jo him again at Thyatira. Here they both agreed return and fack Sardis, the Metropolis of Lydin but were prevented by the great Rains which had late fallen, and swoln the Rivers over which they we to pass. Hereupon they separated once more, Games marching through Bythinia, and Tribigild toward the Hellespont, allowing their Men to seize and plunder whatever came in their way, which they did with great Licentiousness; and being advanced the one as far as Chalcedon, the other into the Territories of Lampsacus, they not only put Constantinople into a great Consternation, but the whole Reman Empire seem'd to be in apparent Danger; for Infolence.

Gaines his Gaines was now become so insolent, that he demand ed a Meeting with the Emperor in Person, refusing to treat with any one else. Arcadius was forc'd to condescend, and so it was agreed between 'em, at Place near Chalcedon, facred to the Memory of Ex phemiathe Martyr, that Gaines and Tribigild should pass out of Asia into Europe, and that such eminen Men in the State as they demanded should be deli ver'd up into their Hands : Thefe were Aureling Saturninus, a Man of Confular Dignity, whom w who was Stilicho's Collegue in this Year's Confulate had occasion to make mention of before, and John Secretary to the Emperor: Arcadius found himfel oblig'd to comply with this Tyrannical Demand and having deliver'd 'em up to Gaines he fent 'em al into Exile. Upon the Conclusion of this Treaty he pass'd over into Europe, follow'd by Tribigila leaving Asia to breath a little, and recover her fell from her late Calamities.

A.D. 400.

After this he continu'd for some time at Constant nople, from whence he remov'd the Soldiers that he formerly lain in Garrison in the City, that he might

Cha

the b

first d

being

migh

poor

Denia

Bisho

cratec

Coura

er to

Churc

might

of God

nother

their

bad re

to be

& Ch

alread

of bei

nity;

been a

Gover

what was n

upon]

fus, P

my M

Oath

was fo

Interes

and h

that (highly

This ! hop,

ho' he

tely

vard

and

hey

ic'd

Ter

anti-

Ro

for

and-

fing

d to

at

En-

ould

nent

deli

lins

late

W

bohn

nfel

and

n al

eaty

gild fell

had

igh

th

the better effect the Deligns he had upon it, He first demanded a Church for himfelf and Followers: being all obstinate Arians in Opinion, in which they might have a free Exercise of their Religion. The mor Emperor, being afraid to give him an absolute Denial, referr'd him to St. Chryfostome, who being Bishop of the City had the Disposal of all Consegated Places. St. Chryfostome oppos'd him with much Courage, told him 'twas not in the Emperor's Pown to alienate any thing that was Sacred; that the Churches were daily open in the City, where he night go and pay his Devotions, and hear the Word of God: To this Gaines answer'd, That being of another Persuasion he could not join with them in their Religious Worship; and that the Services he had render'd the Empire very well deserv'd a Church n be appropriated to him and those of his Faith. & Chrylostome reply'd boldly, That his Rewards dready exceeded his Merits; for he had the Honour if being a General, and enjoy'd the Consular Dignity; that from a low and abject Condition be had hen advanc'd to the highest Employments in the Government; that he ought to be contented with what he already enjoy'd, without demanding what was not in the Emperor's Power to grant : Wherewon he hew'd him an Edict publish'd by Theodous, prohibiting all Schismaticks whatever to hold my Meetings in the City, and reminded him of the Oath he had made to that Emperor, by whom he was so signally oblig'd, of being true to the Roman Interest, obedient to the Laws, and loyal to him and his Children; advising him to have a Regard to that Oath, in the Breach of which he would so highly provoke the Divine Vengeance against him. This Discourse, so seasonably enforced by the Bitop, made him quit his Demand for the prefent, o' he went away very much diffatisfy'd, and full

Ct

whi

em of '

it b

they

Ob

pen

four well

the forn

Catt and

knew

that

to le

retur fia.

made

again

other

and 1

ing,

him

res,

Palef

Fr

the a

diers

ant a torm

ligent

Enen

Sea a

at.

of turbulent ambitious Deligns. About de there appear'd a Comer of unufual Magnet feem'd to sweep the Earth with its Tail. hang directly over the City; portending for Difaster ready to fall not only upon the Ca

His Deligns the Empire. His first Attempt was to fe upon Con-Wealth of the Bankers, of which being disappo stantinople he order'd some of his Barbarians to fire the Pa lace, which, fay the Ecclefiaftical Historians, wasper ferv'd by a Miracle. After this he pretended his felf posses'd by a Spirit, and seiz'd on the Cha of St. John Baptist, seven Miles from the Cit there to perform his Devotions; having order'd for of his Party to follow him, and the reft to flay be hind, who at a convenient time, and upon a si nal given, were to feize the City and deliver it a to him, who would be ready at the Gates to affi them. This Delign had in all probability taken e fect, had he not been too halty, and unadvised anticipated his Time: For without any Signal eive he appear'd before the Walls at the Head of his Me with which the Watch being alarm'd gave notice the Inhabitants, who at first made such Outcries are usual in Towns that are storm'd, but uniting themselves by degrees they set upon the Barbarian that were left behind, whom they dispatched wit frustrated. Such Weapons as came first to hand; and so gall Gaines, whom the Emperor in the very Crisis ha proclaim'd Traitor, that he was forc'd to retire fro the Walls, after he had in vain attempted to bree into the City. In the beginning of the Tumult for ven thousand of the Barbarians fled for Refuge in one of the Churches, as to a Sanctuary; but the

Emperor not thinking it reasonable a Christia

Church should serve as an Asslum to those, wh were declar'd Enemies both to Church and State gave Order to have 'em all destroy'd either by Fit sword; whereupon they uncovered the Roof which lay over the Aleri and from thence ply'd im fo furiously with Brands of Fire that not a Man of 'em elcap'd. - a tale a month of the lateral at a month of The special street of the special street of be big it malfillen el fedi give Mer ces

105 ntin arian

wit

gall

s ha

from

brea

ult fe

t th

Affia

wh

Stati

v Fi

This is the Substance of this History, as we have it both from Zozimus and other Writers, wherein they vary in some Particulars that are not worth our Observation. Gaines, after this Defeat, declar'd open War against the State, and falling into Thrace found the Towns not only fenced with Walk, but well defended by the Courage and Resolution of the Inhabitants, who having learn'd Experience by former Incursions, had now fecur'd their Fruits. Cattle, and all other Provisions within the Walls, and putting themselves into a Posture of Desence new how to fally out and diffres the Boliegers; fo that Gaines funding nothing there but Graft, reloav'd to leave Thrace and march into the Cherfore fus, and eturn through the Straits of the Holla pont into Afu. In the mean time the Emperor and Senate mide choice of one Fraistes to manage the War gainst him; he was by Birth a Berbarian, but in other Respects a Greek not only in his Disposition and Manners, but his Affections and Religion, being, as Zozimus tells us, a Pagan. He had behav'd himself with much Hondur in Several former Servites, having clear'd the East, from Cilicia as far as Palestine, from Robbers that had cruelly insofted Is to share an also were soon and additional

Fraintins readily undertook the Charge, restor'd the ancient Discipline of the Camp, inured his Soldiers to Labour and Industry, being himself vigilant and indefatigable; and as he took great Care to form and exercise his own Troops, so was he as diligent to observe and discover the Condition of the Enemy, preparing to engage with him as well by Sea as by Land; for he had a good number of Pit-

naces,

h

la

#It

21

th

II

ric

fre

Cr

fce

tri

anc

his

Th

VOU

Gai

capa

his

with

fal;

fence

temp

Ron

rable

Aml

band

up in

Defis

King

Marc

naces, with which he intended to dispute Gainer Passage over, if he should attempt. He being now in Diftress for want of Forage resolv'd to stay the no longer, framing therefore a fufficient Number of Planks, he fo artificially compacted 'em together that they were capable of transporting both Menand Horse, which he order'd to embark, and at a convenient Season put out to Sea. The Roman General who had his Eye upon him all this while, put of with his Pinnaces a little from the Shore, and fif fering the Veffels of the Barbarians to make down with the Tide, he with his own Pinnace fac'd the foremost, and falling foul of her with his Brazen Beak after a short Grapple sunk her; the rest of those Vessels follow'd the same Fate, so that very few of the Barbarians escap'd alive. This Loss exceeding ly perplex'd Gaines; who doubtful what measures to take left the Chersone sus and pass'd farther into Thrus where some say he fell into the Hands of the Roma Forces quarter'd in those Parts, as he waited in ex pectation of fresh Supplies, who put him and th Remainder of his Army to the Sword, Others fay that after he had robb'd Thrace of what former De predations had left behind, and maffacred fuch Re mans as still continu'd to follow him; he intende to pass the Ister, and end his Days in his own Coun try, but was prevented by Uldes, or Hudin, at the time Prince of the Hunns, who thought it impro dent to permit him to pass with an Army of his ow Nation, and fettle on the other fide the River; an conceiv'd he should do an acceptable piece of Se vice to the Roman Emperor if he forc'd him from thence; whereupon drawing all his Forces together prepar'd to give him Battel, which Gaines, who kne it impossible for him now to return to the Romans, w forc'd to accept of, and after a sharp Dispute on bot fides, in which he fought with a desperate Refoli tio kill'd.

léT,

nd ve-

fal off

fuf W the

zer

hole

1 0

ing es to race

ma

l th

s fay

D

h Re

ende

Coun

t tha

npru

WOR

; an

of Se

froi

her

kne

MS, W

n hot

efoli

tio

tion, he was flam, and his Head lent by Wiles to ny Roy into a League and to be deliver'd by Gaines his Device from the Calamities under which it had laboured for a long time. But a new worm was now gathering in the West, which to violance assaulted it, that ar length it core up the Empire by the Roots, and robb'd Rome, which for many Ages had been the Queen of Chries, of her Hereditary and Imperial Honours. We were told before, how that Alarich, at Rufinus his Indigation, had invaded Greece, from whence, after he had committed unheard of Cruelus up and down where ever he pas'd, he de-scended into Epirus and Pamenia, both which Countries, togethen with the adjacent Parts, he harras'd and depopulated. His Success made him bold and his Army courageous, so that he began to bend his prepares to Thoughts towards thely it self, and had already deyour'd in his Mind all the Wealth of that beautiful Garden of the Wolf; in whole fertile Plains, and capacious Towns he thought at last to femle. These his Thoughts he communicated to his Men, who with a barbarous Applaule approved of his Propofal; he told em Italy was at prefent weak and defenceless, unable to oppose any sudden violent Attempt; be concluded it no difficult matter to take Rome har self, and thereby seize upon the innumerable Wealth which the Care, Industry, Avarice or Ambition of fo many Ages had with a profuse Husbandry drain'd from the whole World, and hourded up in her. The Army were fo well pleas'd with his Defign that from their General they made him their King, and prepared all things for their intended March; which he thought not fit to begin 'till the

News of is

tes Ro-

ELLER TALE

thong so

- Sal 250 30 3.

Sum-

· met

Summer was pais'd, but choic rather in the Winter the Rigour of which had from their Inducy been inured therein have an Advantage of the following not been used to the Hardships of Wa fon. Having got a sufficient Arm fisting of Alans, Goths, Hann, and Nations, he quitted the lower P. into the upper, confilling ar prefent ria, and Carinthia; from thende he ricum, or Bavaria, the Palles of great Ease master'd; from hence he tius, who had the Command of the I and took and pillaged all the Towns tha way. Hearing Honorius was in Ligure through the Forest of Trees with an is him, feizing on all the little Towns that Coast of the Adriatick, and directing towards the Adda, he enter'd all the Cir Quarter without any Opposition. Havin Bridge for his Men to pass over the Rive a sufficient Number to secure it, and to the Course to Liguria, making what haste he co Hafta, or Aft, where he was informed the ror then lay.

k

21

in

SV

Be Ha

ers

clu

der

not

to

En

ous.

not

ple : Gri/

of a

from

Goth

licho

and p ing w

the I

were !

Mand

very mg in ans. I

on the

e fon: ow'd.

contin

Upon the the Romans are in great Consternation.

It is not to be express'd with how mu News of it sternation the Romans receiv'd the Intelligence intended Invasion. All the Omens, or pis Omens, that had been observ'd for a co Time past, were, by the superstitious Fe People, apply'd to the present Extremities Not ly the Voice of Thunder, but Chattering of Bi frighted 'em: Hail-stones of an unusual Bignes, Bees attempting to fwarm at an unfeafonable tim like fo many Oracles denounc'd the Calamities they already had in view. The frequent Eclipses of the Moon, and the Appearance of a Comet of an extraor dinary dinary Size imposed upon their Ignorance, and awaken'd their guilty Conformous with the Sense of Divine Vengeance. But nothing affected 'em so much as the Sight of two Wolves, which as the Emperor was riding abroad presented themselves to his View, and had the Courage to let upon the Company. Being received upon the Points of their Spears and Swords they were usely dispatched; but when their Bellies were opened, in one was found the Right Hand of a Man, to the great A mazement of the Beholders, and in the other the Left. This Prodigy they con-cluded apparently threaten'd Rome her felf, the Founder whereof, according to their Tradition, had been nourth d by a She Wolf; to that they now began to cast up the Age of the City, and to reckon her End approaching. Their Fears made 'em superstitious, and the Event prov'd they were Prophets.

And as if these unusual and finisher Practices were not fufficient for the publick Distractions, the Ped- A Revolt ple inhabiting Rheits, the present Country of the in Rhatis. Grisons, either at the Infligation of Alarich, or out of a Prospect of mending their Condition, revolted from the Romans, and to facilitated the Design of the Goths: To obviate all these apparent Milebies Sinliche took care to have all the Towns well forcify d and provided, especially Rome it self; norwithstanding which, Alarich was no fooner enter'd Italy but the Inhabitants look'd upon it as already taken, and were for removing with their Wealth, fome into the Mands on the Adrianick, others into Sicily, and the very Officers in the Emperor's Court were for flying into Gant upon the Approach of the Barbarias, Indeed this general Horror, which had feiz'd on the Minds of the People, was no more than a conable Introduction to the Calamities that folbw'd. Italy, that for many Ages had liv'd in a ontinu'd Serenity, in the full Enjoyments of Peace,

S 2

nary

Plenty,

h

fe

in

an

of 25

at.

COI

at .

Ha

San

mar

mr'

fpeć

the

ettac

him

then

Arm

Paul

there

Wing

Legic

drew afresh

much

to the

Barba

Purfu.

main'c

mans]

Plenty, and Prosperity, from this time came the Stage of fuch Calamities, and Years together afforded Examples of fuch and frequent Revolutions, as the World can ha parallel.

Stiliche was the only Man who flood unfhake the Approach of this furious Tempelt, filence their Fears, and reviving their their Fears, and reviving their stopes and Refolutions by his feafonable Speeches and vigorous Prep rations. He told 'em the Goths had taken the A vantage of their own Discord and Distractions had broken into Italy when their Forces were in Rhatia, and that they would dare to flay ger than 'till the Troubles were compos'd on He reminded 'em how unsuccessful the Attempt Italy had ever prov'd to Foreign Armies and pron 'em quickly to reduce their revolted Neighbours. then chastife the Arrogance and Presumption of rich. Accordingly he march'd with all Expe into Rhatia, where the Grisons, being confound his unexpected Approach, began to repent of Folly, and liften to an Accommodation. He a the Advantage of their Fear, reduc'd em by Means to their Duty, and incited 'em to employ Arms in the Defence of the Empire and Long This Affair being happily concluded, he app himself with great Diligence to the raising an A for the Defence of Italy. To those Troops had ferv'd in Rhatia he added fuch as he could de out of Gaul, Britain, and other Parts, and with new Army, amounting to about thirty five th fand Men, he return'd back into Liguria, infor new Life into the States and Cities of Italy

Honorius was at this time in the City of A A. D. whither Alarich was advanc'd in the Depth of W 403. Honorius ter to besiege him, there to force from him such besseg'd in unequal and dishonourable Terms, as the visible Ex Hasta, tremit

Chap.III. XLVIII. Arcadius, Honorius. 261

tremity of his Affairs encouraged him to propole to him. Stilleho, being inform'd of the Danger the Emperor was in hasten'd with the utmost Diligence to his Redes, which with a true Roman is reliev'd Courage, he telledied; for passing over the Adda by Stiliche, he broke through the Enemy's Camp, and throw himfelf with a sufficient Force into the Town. Aldrich was much dishermen'd at this unexpected Bravery. in the Rimans, and began to be weary of he tratian Expedition, whereupon he fummed de Council of War, in which it was refold de to mile the Siege, as they did accordingly. Stillicho, placing himself at the Head of the Amry, which by this time was come up, march defter the Goths, and overtook em at Pollenting or Polenzal, seven Miles distance from Hasta, where he engaged and deseated himsel One Saul, a Pagan and Barbarian, had the chief Command of the Alex Horse that served in the Lappenor's Army: He, concluding the Goths out of respect to their Religion, being Christians, the of the Arian Sect, would not fight on Easter-day, stack'd 'em upon that solemn Festival, promising himself an absolute Victory; but the Goths seeing themselves so hardly preside upon took their Arms, and fought with greater Animofity, fo that Paul was flain, and his Troops put to Flight, and thereby endanger'd the Milcarriage of the whole Wing, had not Soliche come feafonably in with the Legions to their Affiftance; he rally'd the Horse. drew up the whole Army, and fo began the Fight afresh, which was maintain'd on both Sides with much Refolution. At length the Victory inclin'd Alarich deto the Romand; for after an obstinate Contest the feated at Barbarians gave Ground, and loft as many in the Pollentia; Pursuit as they had done in the Fight. Stilicho remain'd Mafter of the Field of Battel, and the Romans pillag'd the Camp of the Enemy, where they

W

be

E

CA

Su

an

A

fre

fo

Ser

had

he fa

103 anc nifi

of

hav the

Wei

out

the Arc

com

in t the

Ho

him

pire Pro

Softo

Biff

his

recover'd many Captives, and found an inestimable Treasure which the Goths had plunder'd in the wealthy Cities of Greece, among which, if Classics may be credited, were the Purple Robes of the Emperor Valens, Stilicho might have in reepred the Goths in their Flight, and have destroy'd Ala. rich, but he thought fit to let him escape over the Po with the Remainder of his Troops, either be cause he conceiv'd it imprudent to press too hard upon Barbarians in Despair, or for that he intended to make some use of them afterwards, or delie a to render himfelf by the War more confiderable to the Empire; whatever the Reasons were, by an A greement between them, they were immediately to quit Italy; in pursuance to which Alarich retire with his shatter'd Troops as far as Verona, but there in Breach of his Promise to Stilicho, he put his felf into a Condition of engaging a fecond time with the Romans, should they think fit to hazard another Battel; which Stilicho, provok'd at the Perfidiousness of the Barbarian, was the more inclimable to do, both because the Enemy was drawn farther off from Rome, and the River Po was betwint the and again Here the Romans had once more the Advantage, at Verona. and Alarich narrowly escaping fled with the Rennant of his Army to the Mountains, over which he attempted to pass into Rhatia or Gaul, but was op pos'd by Stiliche, who kept him in fo long till most of his Men forlook him and join'd with the Romans; and then, after he had undergone a multitude of Inconveniences, he retir'd with a few of his Companions into Dalmatia. Stilicho, by all ap pearance, might have prevented his Escape, but he is thought to have enter'd into a fecret Confedera cy with him, thinking his Grandeur and Authoriry with the Emperor could by no means be main tain'd fo well as by the continuance of the War. This

Chap.III. XLVIII. Arc. Hon. Theodo. II. 263

ble

the

be ard

of

till

the

nul

of ap

t he

era

ori-

ain

his

This Year, so remarkable for the Success of the Romans against Alarich, had Theodofins, the Son of Arcadius, and Rumorodius for Confuls. Theodofus Theoposiwas then but two Years of Age, and had the Year us II. before been declar'd Augustus by his Father; the East all this while enjoy d a perfect Peace, and Arcadins found himself at leisure to ease several of his Subjects by some wholsome and seasonable Laws, and reward fuch as had been zealous in his Service. About the latter end of the Year Honorius remov'd from Ravenna towards Rome, as well to triumph for his Victories over the Goths, as to fatisfie the Senate and People, who by their feveral Petitions had defir'd the Honour of his Presence. At Rome he enter'd into his footh Confulship, chuling Arifenetus for his Collegue. The People were overjoy'd to fee him, especially upon such an Occasion, and express'd their Satisfaction in costly Feasts, magnificent Shows, and other publick Demonstrations of their Joy. In the mean time Stilicho is faid to have made a Peace with Alarich, and that with the Emperor's Participation; the Conditions of it were, Than Alarich fould retire with all his Troops out of the Territories of Honorius, and break into the Eastern Part of Illyricum, which belong'd to Arcadius; that Honorius or Stilicho fould, in time convenient, send Jovius, Lieutenant for the Emperor in the Western Illyricum, who in Conjunction with the Goths should seize upon both Parts in Behalf of Honorius; upon which Alarich went and possess'd himself of Epirus, a Branch of the Eastern Empire, where he waited in Expectation of Stilicho's Promifes.

About this time began the Troubles of St. Chry- St. Chrysoftome, that worthy Father of the Church, and softome Bishop of Constantinople, which ended not but with persecuted. his Life. Being a declar'd Enemy to all Vice and 404.

VICI-

Cl

he

Ha

pos

ten

the

tha

the

Ar

ban

bar

to I

the

qua

ver

turi

fho

out

Ho

St.

Car

mar

25 (

her

agai

cafi

wer

inte

mac red

wit.

and

Exi

Per

vicious Practices, he often exclaim'd in his Sermons against the Pride, Wantonness and Vanity of the Female Sex, which drew upon him the Ill-will of feveral Ladies in the Court, amongst whom were Marsa, or Martia, the Widow of Promotus Castruccia, Saturnius his Widow; and Engraphia; these three joining together persuaded the Empres Eudoxia, that St. Chry fostome in one of his Sermons had call'd her Jezebel, at which the was extreamly incens'd against him. Some Bishops whom he had depos'd by reason of their corrupt Lives, and several Priefts whom he had reproved and corrected to their Licentiousness, embrac'd so favourable an Op portunity of Revenge; among these was John, one of his own Deacons, who produc'd several Articles against him, to which a Synod of Bishops, summon'd for that purpose by Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, his declar'd Enemy, requir'd him to give his Answer. The principal of these Articles were, That he fold several consecrated Vessels had laid a Snare to entrap Severian, Bishop of Gabala; had ordain'd four Bishops at one single Ordination; had suffer'd Women to come into his Chamber when no one was by; had conferr'd Holy Orders on Several Persons without Testimonials, or the Consent of his Clerey; that he eat by himself, and led a very beastly, gluttonous Life; and the like. Among those that appear'd the most vigorous against him were Severian of Gabala, Acacins of Berea, and Antiochus of Prokemains; who tho' they were all Men remarkable in their Generation for their Eloquence and Knowledge of the Scriptures, yet did they fuffer themfelves to be miss-led by Theophilus, either out of Envy to his great Reputation, or some other private Regard. After feveral Citations this Mock-Synod prefum'd to pronounce a formal Sentence upon him, tho' they all knew that the Particulars with which he

Chap.III. XLVIII. Arc. Hon, Theodo. II. 265

he was charg'd were either false or insignificant. Having by Unanimity of Voices declar'd him depos'd from his Function, they order'd their Sentence to be communicated as well to the Clergy as the Court, and undertook to inform the Emperor, that Chrysostome, having had the Arrogance to call the Empress Jezebel, was guilty of High-Treason. Arcadine confirmed the Judgment of the Synod, banish'd him the City, and constrain'd him to embark in an obscure, tempestuous Night, and retire to Prenotus in Bithynia.

ns

he

o£

re

44 els instruction

les n-

to

les

ad

43

46

4

-

d

of.

-

m

V-

1

of

te.

od.

n,

h

10

But the Day following both the Emperor and the Empress were to alarm'd at a terrible Earthquake, in which the Emperor's Apartment fuffer'd very much, that they refolv'd to recal him; he return'd accordingly, and was reftor'd to his Bishoprick, from which however he was again thrust out not long after. For a Statue being erected in Honour of the Empress, near the great Church of St. Sophia, in Conftantinople; those who had the Care of the Dedication represented several Idolatrous Shows to the People, who, pleas'd with the Performance, gave such a loud and tumultuous Applause, as disturb'd and interrupted the Divine Service; hereupon the Bishop exclaim'd, with his usual Zeal, against the Authors of such an unseasonable Disorder, and let fall some Words relating to the Occation of it, which being reported to the Empress, were made to speak a Sense different from what he intended, which reviv'd her Dillike to him, and made her refolve to ruin him; whereupon the ftirred up his old Enemies against him, supported 'em with her Authority and Interest in the Emperor, and never left off 'till he was once more Depos'd and Banish'd. For three Years together he liv'd an Exile, labouring under great Hardships in his own Person, and under no less in those his Friends were made

th

rea

ftc

up

E

br

w

fo

Se

bo

fet

th

lai

O

to

aff

Sol

W

W

fli

of

lei

m

fe

tr

til

T

PC

th

pi

th M

made to endure for his fake. His Enemies still perfisted to persecute him even in his Exile, procuring him to be remov'd, by the Emperor's Order, for place to place, and to be roughly us'd by the diers who had the Charge of him; at last, he fuffer'd all the Fatigues of a three Months Voyage during which they hurry'd him up and down w much Inhumanity, tho' he had a Feaver upon him, occasion'd by their barbarous Treatment, which they plainly told him they did by Order from the Court, that he might die upon the Road, the brought him to Cumana, in a Temple near which Place they lodg'd him for that Night; the new Morning the Holy Bishop finding his End proaching, and that he had not long to live, deli'd them to defer their Journey but for a few which they were so far from granting, the press'd him with more hafte than ordinary, but were scarce advanc'd a League and half on their Way before they found his Feaver so strong upon him that they were forc'd to return back to the Temple, where, upon the Fourth of Nevember, he expir'd. In his Life he flood the main Champion for the Purity of the Christian Religion, and in his Death was a Reproach to feveral who openly profess'd, and ought to have been as shining Lights to the rest of the World, but had not arriv'd to that Purity of Spirit and Integrity of Heart, require and enforc'd to often in the Gospel. We may learn from the Sufferings this great Man endurd, how requifite a Brotherly Love is to the Peace and Unity of the Church, and that the want of it does not proceed more from a Disagreement in Points of Doctrine, than from fome private Ends and leich Confiderations, from which the Fathers of the Church themselves are not always free.

That

Chap. III. XLVIII. Arc. Hon. Theodo. II. 267

per-

icir

noq

the

he

on

his

10-

1 to hit

ay

d,

ind

oes

of all de

at

That St. Chrysoftome ow'd all his Misfortunes to the Malice of the Empress Endoxia, we have no reason to doubt. She was, according to the Historian, a Woman insupportably Insolent, imposing upon her Husband, and being impos'd upon by her Eunuchs, who committed great Diforders, and brought innumerable Corruptions into the Court, which was pefter a with Parafites and Informers; fo that if St. Che foftome tax'd her obliquely in his Sermons, it as well became the great Character he bore in the Church, as it became her Pride to refent it. The Night after his fecond Banishment the Episcopal Palace took Fire, the Flames of which A Fire in laid hold on the Roof of the great Church ad- Conftantijoining to it, which was presently reduc'd to Ashes, nople. together with the Hall where the Senate us'd to affemble. This Misfortune was imputed to St. Chryfoftome's Friends, as if they had fet Fire to the Church with an Intent to have no other Bishop there but himself; upon which Consideration they were cruelly perfecuted, and thrown into Prifon, where feveral of 'em dy'd of the Torments inflicted on 'em! But the Intelligence the Court had of some fresh Commotions put a stop to their violent Proceedings; for the Mauri, who inhabited the most maccessible Places of the Mountain Taurus, fell in feveral Bodies down upon the adjacent Country, where they over-ran the Villages and unfortify'd Towns, which they fack'd and plunder'd. The Court made Choice of one Arbazacius to oppose em, and relieve Pamphylia. Upon his Approach they retird back into the Mountains, whither he purfu'd 'em, and apply'd himfelf with fo much Vigour to the Service at first, that had he perfisted he might have totally subdu'd 'em, and prevented the like Depredations for the future; but being a Man given up naturally to Ease and Pleasure he grew remis,

Pan

Ital

was

a H

Sac

nea

fter

COL

tha

про

vot

the

def

wa

wo

nei

25

had

da

th

w

ca

M

do

pl

Va

W

R

of

A

remis, and suffer'd himself to be brib'd preferring his private Gain to the publick Good. Of this great Complaint was made to the Court, whither he was sent for in order to be call'd to an Account for his Prevarication; but presenting the Empress with part of what he had gotten from the Isaari he evaded the Prosecution, and spent the rest in the fashionable Diversions of the City.

A.D. The Year following Rome was again threaten'd 406. with no less than an utter Destruction, from an In-Radagaisus undation of Barbarians led on by Radagaisus, term'd Invades 1- by St. Austin King of the Goths. He observing taly.

Alarich, after his disgraceful Overthrow, was re-

Alarich, after his difgraceful Overthrow, was receiv'd into Confederacy with the Romans, and being honour'd and respected by 'em was averse from War, and willing to be at Peace with them, perfuaded the Nations inhabiting the other Side of the Rhine and the Ister to fall into Italy, and revenge upon it the late Slaughter of their Countrymen, alluring 'em with the Hopes of taking Rome, the Wealth of which he promis'd to give up to 'em. Hereupon a Body of four hundred thousand Men united themselves under him, and march'd directly for Italy. Upon the first Intelligence of their Motions, Stilicho advis'd Honorius to add to his Roman Legions such Numbers of the Hunns and A lans as were willing to ferve him under the Conduct of Oldes and Sarus; and as if all these were not fufficient to encounter fuch Swarms of Barbarians, he invited the Slaves to take Arms upon Promise of Liberty, a thing never known to be done, but when the Common-wealth was reduc'd to the greatest Extremity; and that those that were Free-men might be encourag'd to arm themselves in Defence of their Country, he engag'd himself to pay them, that came in by fuch a time, a certain Sum by way of Advance or Gratuity. Rada-

Chap.III. XLVIII. Arc. Hon. Theodo. II. 269

ring

ther

refs

auri

in

en'd

In-

m'd

ing

re-

beom

er-

the ge al-

the

m.

len

lly

lo-

lo-

4

not

15,

of

en

Æ

en

S

O,

y

1-

Radagaifus having in the mean time ravag'd all Pannonia, was pass'd the Julian Alps and got into Italy, directing his Course towards Rome, which he was already Master of in his Imagination. Being Heathen he was very superstitious, performing his Sacrifices every Morning to his Gods. As he drew near the City the Romans were in the greatest Confternation; and the Heathens, who still made up a confiderable Part of the Inhabitants, declared aloud that Radagaifus would assuredly prevail, not so much upon the Account of his numerous Forces as his Devotion to the Gods, who were banish'd by the ungrateful Citizens from Rome, which had deserted their Worship, and forsaken them that had so often defended her; therefore unless the ancient Religion was reftord, and Christianity abolish'd, the City would certainly fall into the Hands of the Barbarians. With fuch Complaints as these was every Corner of the City fill'd, and Christ's Name blasphem'd as the Occasion of the present Calamities. Stilicho had prudently declin'd oppoling himself against Radagaisus and his numerous Army, whilit he was in the open Champaign Country, where he might in a manner be furrounded by the Barbarians; but when he found him advanc'd as far as Hetruria, call'd at present Tuscam, a Region full of craggy Mountains and narrow Vallies, and that he was fet down before Florence, which he had so well supply'd with Necessaries that it was able to make a very vigorous Defence, then like a wary Captain he thought fit to let upon him: Accordingly he advanc'd towards him, and after he had fufficiently weary'd out his Army in that Siege, he watch'd an Opportunity, and fell upon his Rear with fo much Resolution, that no less than an hundred thousand Radagaisus of his Men were cut off, without the Loss of one defeated, Man on the Roman side. He drew up with the rest

Ch

and

tifts

thei

Chi

lifte

Cru

fual

on '

wit

duc

Ital

he

whi

fenc

ther

and

he v

bar1

by 1

thef

bers

him

the

rou!

Exp

opp

had wer

Day

lion

pow fuff

pass

Don

bins

of his Army to the Mountains of Fefice, where he fecur'd his Men from the Roman Attacks, but expos'd 'em to the Inconvenience of a barren defolate Place, in which they were closely belieg'd by Sucho. In this Condition he attempted to escape, and leave his Men to the Mercy of the Romans, into whose Hands he fell, together with his Sons, and such stain. Was shortly after put to Death. The rest of the Barbarians, overcome with Hunger, submitted in such great Numbers that they were fold by the Romans like Beasts, a whole Drove at a time: But having contracted an ill Habit of Body by their long Fasting, and unwholsome Diet afterwards, they all dy'd in a few Days; and Stilicho had a Statue of Brass erected to his Memory, as a Reward for his great Industry and extraordinary Service.

Whilst Europe was thus harras'd and oppresed by the Barbarians, the State of Africk was ferene and quiet; but the Repose of the Church was interrupted by the Donatists, who us'd the Catholicks with great Outrage and Violence. Aurelius, Bishop of Carthage, had fummon'd a Synod against 'em, from whence Theatins and Anodius, two venerable Prelates, were deputed with Letters to the Emperors Arcadius and Honorius, in which they inform'd'em that they had left nothing unattempted to reduce those Hereticks to the Church; but that they still continued obstinate, and instead of inclining to their Christian Proposals, they fell in a most outragious manner upon those Catholicks that came in their way, and had forcibly seiz'd upon several of their Churches. These Proceedings made 'em sly to their Majesties for Protection, beseeching 'em to have a regard to the Catholick Interest, and put a Stop to the Violence of those Hereticks, lest they compelled the People by Force to subscribe to their mischievous Doctrines. Honorius readily granted their Request,

Chap.III.XLVIII. Arc. Hop. Theodo. II. 271

and proceeded with great Rigour against the Donatifts, by which means feveral of 'em relinquish'd their Errors, and return'd into the Bosom of the Church. But the most zealous among em would liften to no Accommodation, but exercis'd great Cruelties upon all those who were not of their Perfualion, whenever they could lay their Hands upon em.

and and ato and

the

Ros

dut

neir

icy

of

his

by

ind pt-ith

ď

om re-

ors em

ece

till

eir

385 est

eir

eir

to 14

#5 ſt,

nd

This same Year the Barbarians pour'd themselves A new Inwith fresh Forces into the Empire, under the Con- vasion of duct of Gedegifil, King of the Vandals, who feeing the Barbalialy distracted with Wars on every side, thought he had now a fit Opportunity to invade Gaul; which being remove far from the Emperor's Prefence, could not be to feeedily reliev'd. Departing therefore out of Scythia at the Head of his Vandals and Alans, he first march'd through Sarmatia, where he was join'd by some of the Quadi and other Barbarians, who had formerly fettled themselves there by the Permission of Constantine the Great. With these he enter'd into Germany, where great Numbers of the Inhabitants affociated themselves with him, either fore'd to it through Fear, or allur'd by the hopes of Plunder. Having now a very numerous Army at his Command, he advanc'd with all Expedition to the Rhine, where the Franks at first oppos'd him, either out of regard to a League they had lately enter'd into with Stiliche, or for that they were willing to preferve a Province they hop'd one Day to be Masters of themselves, from the Incurfions of so numerous an Enemy; but being overpower'd with Odds they were forc'd to retire, and suffer Godegisil to advance with his Army, who pass'd the Rhine the thirtieth of December, An. Dom. 406, Arcadius being the fixth time and Probinus Confuls.

loc

ce

in t

wh

der

tim tain oba fib

onc my one the

> Re ling and

twe the the gre

Hos dor

They were no fooner got on the other fide the Rhine, but they miserably harras'd the Country every side, whilst the Governors of the Provin who had been plac'd there by the Emperor in no Condition to oppose em. The first Cir. felt their Fury was Mayence, which they took b Affault, here many thousands of the Inhabitants fled for Refuge into their Churches, whom however they most cruelly massacred, and then rased the City. Wormes held out a confiderable time, but de spairing of any Relief they at last surrender'd at Di foretion. The Cities of Spires and Strasbourgh follow'd the same Fate, being taken and pillag'd. From hence they march'd to Rheims, which they took by Storm; after which they cut off the Head of Nicasius, Bishop of the Place, and put his Sister Eutropia, and great multitudes of the other Inhabitants to Death. From Rheims they went to Arm, Tournay, Amiens, and up as far as the Sea-Coalis about Calice and Bologne, facking and pillaging all the Towns they met with in their March.

The Bria new Emperor.

This Misfortune was attended by another; forther tains rebel, Inhabitants and Troops that were quarter'd in Briand set up tain, fearing lest the Vandals should pass over the Sea and fubdue them with the rest, revolted from their Obedience to Honorius, and fet up one Mark whom they declared Emperor. Presently after, being on a fudden grown weary of their new Prince, they depriv'd him of his Life and Dignity together, and plac'd one Gratian in his Room, who was a Countryman of their own. Him they veited with an Imperial Robe, and dutifully attended him for four Months together, but then upon some Dislike they murder'd him, and conferr'd the Sovereignty upon one Constantine; not so much in respect to his Courage, for he was a very inconsiderable Man in the Army, but in regard of his Name, which they look'd

Chap. HL XLVIII. Are. Hon. Theodo. II. 273

look'd upon as fortunate, and importing good Success: For they were in loopes he would deliver 'em from the Barbarians who had over-run Gaul, and govern the Empire with Honour and Reputation, as Constantine the Great had done in the foregoing Age, who was of the same Name, and had been advanc'd to the Imperial Dignity in the same Island. This new Prince, immediately after his Promotion, pass'd over into Gaul, and taking with him the very Flower of all the British Youth, so utterly exhausted the Military Force of the Island, that it was wholely broken, and the Island left naked to new Invaders, by which means she lost her old Inhabitants, and submitted to the Power of other Lords.

e Ci-

is do t Di

a fol-

took

ad of

Sifter

habi-

erras.

batta

orthe

Bri

r the from fark, be-

ince,

D Was

with n for islike

gnty

o his

in in

they

ok'd

Constantine, as soon as he was got on the other side, laid Siege to Bologn, which he carry'd with little Opposition, after which all the Roman Forces in the Country came readily in and join'd him; by whose Assistance he made himself Master in a short time of all Gallia Celeica, and a great part of Aguitain, whilst Limenius, Prasectus Pratorio, and Caribbandes, General of the Foot, concluding it impossible to resist Constantine and the Vandals both at once, shed into Italy with the Reliets of their Army; leaving the Vandals to waste the Country on one side, and Constantine to pursue his Success on the other.

Honorius receiv'd the first Intelligence of this Revolt at Ravenna, where he was intent upon raising an Army, which was to march into Illyricum and join Alarich, as it had been formerly agreed between'em, and together with him fall upon his Brother's Territories; to which he had been induc'd either at the Instigation of Stilicho, who found he had great Enemies in Arcadius his Court, or because Honorius thought himself affronted in his Ambassadors, by the rough Usage they receiv'd from Arcadius,

a

Sir

bei

car in l

tine

mai

the

Ye

the mat

Crat

Wa

my

the

rely

and

bett

the

hun

113

H'S

ling

T

Vano

Mar Emt

Pray long

les'c

on a Princ

thro

Stade

ver'd

mon Mag

be bi

Tree of the same cadins, to whom they were fune with Letters for his Brother in behalf of St. Cory foftome. But as food as he was inform'd of these strange Revolutions in Gant, he chang'd his Design, and so the Hipsing Expedition was interrupted.

A.D. 408. Arcadius dies.

The Year following, on the first of May, in the Confulfhip of Baffus and Philippus, Arcadius the Emperor dy'd at Constantinople; he lest behind him of Son, and four Daughters; Pulcheria, Placilla, cadia, and Marina; who became all of em ille Strious for their Piety, and Zeal for the true Relies on. Arcadius dy'd in the Flower of his Age, being not full one and thirty Years old; of which he had reign'd twelve with his Father, and thirteen Years three Months and fifteen Days after his Death wife was himself a Prince well inclin'd, a great Liver of his Subjects, and a Friend to Justice and Sobretts int he fuffer'd himself to be roo much ruld and in upon by his Favourites, who abufing his Auch most grievously oppres'd his Subjects. He waste thing too uxorious, especially at the latter end of his Reign, which involv'd the Government in agent many Difficulties, and introduc'd strange Containons into the Court. He left for his Successor The dofies firmam'd the Younger, being at his Bathan Death no more than feven Years old, but he regard above two and forty Years after his Decease.

His Character.

III. Arcadins found by the Measures his Biother Honorius took, and his Practices in Illyrican, that he had little reason to depend upon him; see mg therefore left after his Death he should for the King of his Son of the Empire, he left him to the Care at Perfia his Protection of Isdegerdes, King of Perfia, with who Son's Guar- he had lately enter'd into a strict League and Alliance for an hundred Years, and in whose approve Honour and Virtue he knew his Son would find Isdegerdes undertook the Charge with fure Refuge. Sin

He makes

Chapilli. XLVIII Hono. Theodofius II. 275

Sincerity, and acquired himself as faithfully; for being unable to quit his own Dominion, and take care of Throdofius, or attend to the Administration in Person, he sent Antiochus in his room to Constant tinople, a prudent, honet, and experienc'd Statesman; to whom was join'd in Authority Anthomius, the Prafettus Praterio, who had been Conful three Years before: He was one of the greatest Men of the Age, being a zerious Christian, a vigilant Statesman, an honest Courtier, and a valiant Soldier, Sorates faith he encompale'd Conftantinople with new Walls and Fortifications, that he never undertook my thing without the Advice and Approbation of the ablest Men in the State, but above all others he rely dinuch upon Trailus the Sophist, a wife Man, and of much Experience. Some lay Anthemius, the better to decure the Empire to Theodofins, procur'd the Peace between the Romans and Persians for an hundred Years; which however was confirmed in his Father's Life-sime, as we observed before, tho it's very likely he might be instrumental in the cauling it to be renewed and the state of the s ite in the same of the same of

ははなるとはは

with

in

This Peace contributed very much to the Aduncement of the Christian Faith in Porfia, whither Maruthas, Bilhop of Melopotamia, being fent in an Embaffic, he is faid to have cured the King by his L. 7. C. 8. Prayers of a Diftemper under which he had been long afflicted, and deliver'd his Son who was posles'd with a Devil. These Cures were look'd upon as miraculous, in confideration of which the Prince gave Maruthas leave to build feveral Churches throughout his Dominions; and was almost perleaded to embrace the Faith himself, having discover'd the Impostures of his own falle Doctors, mong which this was not the least remarkable. The Magi, who were afraid Christianity was going to be built upon the Ruins of Paganilm, conveyed a

Man

C

hi

WI

lor

Al

Ita

har

the

tha

he

Ba

the

Caj

W

M

fur

to

wh

to

and

Wes

ma

fair

fea(

mit

of t turi

Fat

imn

fil v

Gas

twi

que

We

the

the

and

Man privately under the Temple of the Sun who when the King came thither to perform his Sacrife. ces, cry'd out from beneath with a hollow and diff. mal Voice, that Ifdegerdes ought to be dethroid having provoked the God of the Perfians by his incions Favours Shown to the Christians. This Voice, which he thought came from Heaven, at first much furpriz'd the furperstitious Prince, but he was feet undeceiv'd by Maruthas, who advis'd him to open the Ground near that Place where the Voice feen to be deliver'd; which was no fooner done but they discover'd a Hole wherein a Man lay conceal'd, wh was immediately put to Death by the King's Order, together with leveral of the Magica This Relation will not feem strange to those, who are not ignores of the many Impostures put upon the World town days by the villainous Artifices of the Re whence he tont Loylains manya on an Priests.

Honorius had not as yet heard of his Brother's Death, but had his Thoughts intent upon Confin tine, and his Progress in Gaul, against whom sol cho had fent one Sarus at the Head of a fufficient Army; who meeting with Justinian, one of the Usurper's Othicers, a Man ignorant and uncapeble he kill'd him upon the Place, with the greatest put of his Forces; and having got a very rich Boots, he march'd towards Valentia, whither he heard Constantine was remov'd, and where he resolv'd to be siege him. Nevigastes was another of the Usurper's Generals, whom Sarus by fair Promises drew of to his Party, but afterwards order'd him to be slam, contrary to the Faith he had given him. Into their Places Constantine advanc'd Gerontins and Edobechus, the one a Frank, and the other born in Britain rus was too sensible of the Courage and Experience of those two Persons to wait their coming, and there fore he rose up in haste from Valentia, after he had laid hid Siege to it seven Days. They pursu'd him with so much Vigour and Execution, that with long Marches and many Dangers he got to the Alps, where he was forc'd to buy his Passage into Italy by quitting all his Booty to the Bacanda, an hardy desperate People inhabiting those Parts.

Chap III. XL WIII. Hono: Theodofius II. 277

After this Constantine united all his Forces together, and with much Diligence fortify'd the Alps tine's Prothat lay between Gallia Celtica and Italy, and that gress. he might secure himself from the Insults of the Barbarians, as well as of the Romans, he fortify'd the Rhine, and then made Constant, his eldest Son, Cester; having recall'd him from Winchester, as our Writers say, where he had devoted himself to a Monastical Life. After this Constantine, having made ははませんのまできる。 part

oth,

Gon

100-

pers

Fuo

ain,

heir

Sa-

page

ene-

had

laid

fure of the greatest Part of Gast, which submitted to him, settled his Imperial Seat at Arles, from whence he fent Constans, with a Powerful Army into Spain, where he proceeded with much Success, and took Didymins and Veronianus Prisoners; these were two of Theodosius his Relations, and if we may believe Zozimus had much disturb'd the Afhirs of their Country, which therefore with more mitted the Command of the Army, and the Care of the Pyreneer to Geroneius, his Lieutenant, he return'd into Gand, and presented the Prisoners to his Father, by whose Order they and their Wives were immediately put to Death. All this while Godegi-fil was pursuing his Conquests, proceeding out of Ganl into Spain; for by a private Agreement betwixt him and Constantine, whilst Constans was Conquering the Eastern Parts, he was to seize on the West; whereupon the Vandals took Gallicia, where they settl'd: The Suevi push'd their Conquests farther, and the Alans fix'd themselves in Portugal and Andalousia. From these Barbarians descended the Ancient Kings of Spain, the first of which in the Catalogue is Hermenrie, King of Gallicia, ving first Wife's Sifter.

T 3

Honorius During these Transactions in Gaut and Spaint Marries his Emperor Honorins, who had lately loft his fift Wife, the Eldest Daughter of Stiliche, was the ry'd to Thermania, her Younger Sifter. This is cestuous Match, to which Stilicho is faid to have been very averse, was effected by the Procurement of his Wife Serena, who hoped by this means to preserve her Authority over Honorins, who indeed was very much guided by her. Tho he had Co habited many Years with Mary the Elder, he me ver had any Children, which made Serena more defirous to marry him to the Younger, being and tions of Royal Issue, but she likewise communications of this we have from the mus, who tells us that when Honorius was first con tracted to Mary, her Mother knew the was to young for his Bed, and yet was not able to of vent or defer the Nuprials; fearing therefore he Daughter's Life to be in Danger, the had recourte in this Extremity to an old Woman, who by the Charms work'd fo far with the Emperor, that her Daughter liv'd and dy'd a Virgin; for it feets the Spell had a stronger Power than was designed, and never forfook the Emperor till his Deathwiff this Account be true they must be in an Erros, who impute the want of Confummation to the fudden Dearh of Thermantia, as well as her Elder Si-Thermantia was depos'd after her Father's Death, and fent back to her Mother, as we shall see hereafter.

Before the Nuptial Solemnity was well over News was brought to Court that Alarich having quitted Epirus, and pass'd the Straits between Parnonia and Venetia, was encamp'd at a Town call Amon, from whence he advanc'd into Bavaria, anc

Ar

ter

Ch

thr

for

the fall

tor

tyo

we

was

tourg

10 Sum

to 1

bis

pect

178 wre

Ho

fince

call

mea

genc

thir

thou

Anf

be p

quie

mee of g

affir

Pen

fear

ry (

Chipill. XLVIII Hono Theodofius II. 279

and fent to demand of Stiliche Mony to pay his Army, which, upon his Account, had been Quarser'd fo long in Faires, and likewife to defray the Charges of the present Expedition, otherwise he threaten'd to pierce into Italy, and lev all walte before him. Hereupon the Senate was affembl'd, and the Question put what was to be done in this Affair; after a short Consultation most of the Song. A War protors were for a War, in which Sviligho and his Par pos'd in the ty opposid em with great Earnestness. They that gainst Alawere on the other lide delir'd to know why he rich, which was fo fond of a Peace, which was to be bought is oppos'd by to the great Diffenour of the Roman Majesty, Stilicho. urging that it became the Dignity of the Empire to chaffile the Insolonce of a Barbarian, that presum'd to make a Market both of Peace and War; to this he answer'd. That Alarich had by Monorius his Orders continued thus long in Epirus, in Expettation of being employ'd against Arcadius, and in Confunction with the Roman Forces to have wrested Illyricum from him, and have joind it to Honorius his Dominions; that the thing had long since been put in Execution, had he not been recall'd by the Emperor's Letters, procur'd by Sorena's means, who was careful to preserve a good Intelligence between the two Brothers. Whether the thing was just and reasonable or no, Stiliche was thought by the Senate to have given a very good Answer, and so it was agreed that Alarich should be paid four thousand Pounds of Gold to keep him quiet, the many confented against their Judgments meerly for fear of Stilicho; and Lampadius, a Man of great Birth and Reputation, openly opposed it, affirming boldly, That they were not now buying a Peace, but figning a Contract of Servitude; but fearing this Liberty of Speech might draw the Fury of the Court upon him, as foon as the Senate

Bra

ror,

fud-

Si-

CT'S Hec

ver ag

H

and

was up he fled into the next Church for Sancha Stilicho having, by Virtue of this Act of Sen purchas'd a Peace from Alarich, prepar'd all the for his intended Expedition against Confiamine Gaul. Honorius himself had a mind to take a P gress to Ravenna, there to view and encourse the Army that was to defend him and the Empire against so considerable an Enemy; to this Stelle was very averse, for he had no mind the Empere fhould keep any Correspondence with the Ar and therefore endeavour'd, by all Persuasions possible, to divert him from it; but finding him the to his Resolution, he procur'd Sarus, Captain the Barbarians that lay at Vienna, to raile fome Di sturbance, not aiming by it at any Innovation but only to frighten the Emperor, and deter him from his intended Progress.

About this time the Emperor heard of the Death of Arcadius, and fent for Stiliche to Benenia to confer with him about the Publick Affairs of the Er pire. Honorius had a mind to take a Journey in the East, to look after his young Nephew's Inco rest, and settle the Affairs in those Parts; this Sin liche oppos'd with many weighty Arguments, by showing him how expensive such an Expedition must needs be, bow necessary his Residence was in Italy at this Conjuncture; that Constantine, who had already over-run all Gaul, would take the vantage of his Absence, and bring more Mischief upon the Empire; he added, that Alarich himfelf, the now in Peace with him, was deceitful and a Bar barian, having a powerful Army at his Command, and therefore not too far to be trusted. propos'd that Alarich's Forces should be join'd to the Roman Legions; that the Army so united should be under the joint Command of Alarich, and the Officers belonging to those Legions; that they [bould (ho per. Let ing

in

a

lou and Jari Oly

Zo Rie Pre EU

a pr bou on ly .

end desi but rem

thoj po/e wit wit

PHT, 4nd vin had

get lym or I Sold

all : tho cho

Chapilli XLVIII Hone, Theodosius II. 281

hould march with all Expedition against the Wire per, and that he himself should be dispatch'd with Letters from the Emperor to Constantinople, contains ing the Substance of what he would have transacted in the Balt or paint a lead delated approved

Tho Honorius already began to entertain a Jea- Honorius loufie of Stiliche, yet he approv'd of all he propos'd, grows jeaand having fign'd his Letters for Theodofins and A- lous of Sti-Jarich the departed from Bonania, attended by one Olympius, born nigh the Euxine Sea, a Man, fays Zozimus, who, upon the Reputation of Christian Riety, which he outwardly affected, and a great Pretence to Modesty and Sobriety, was in very great Esteem with the Emperor, who advanced him to aprincipal Post in the Court, and employ'd him about his Person. He discourfing with Honorius upon the Road, encreas'd the Suspicions he had lately concerv'd of frilicho's Defigns, and particularly endeavourd to persuade him, that he so earnestly defin'd to be fent into the East for no other reason, but that he might have the better Opportunity to remove Theodofnis, and transfer the Sovereighty of those Parts upon his Son Eucherius; to which purpose he held private Correspondence with Alarich with Godegifil, and even the Usurper Constantine, with subons he had hitherto prolong'd the War on purpose to make himself considerable to the State, and powerful in the Army. He so throughly convinc d the Emperor of this, and whatever else he had to alledge against Stiliche, that he resolv'd to get rid of him as foon as he could, and gave Olymping and Sarus Orders to destroy him. At Ticinum, A Mutiny or Pavia. Olympius wrought fo cunningly with the at Tici-Soldiers, who had no Kindness for Stilicho, that they num. all mutiny'd, and in a tumultuous manner flew all those who were known to be well affected to Stilicho; among these were Limenius, Prafectus Pratorio

2000年日中日中日 2000年

by

tr

er 20

14 be

re Z ld

C

bu

OU

Le

De

tw

at of

lia

gre

COI

Ze

at i

his

fen wh

me

roi

to

the

plo

the

lee

gra

Tas

Ch

R

fak

ce

fh:

WC

T

wł ly

Albai

in Ganl, and Chariabandes, who had lately fled from Constantine, as we observ'd before, and were no come to the Emperor to Ticinum; together with these they sew Vincentius, Salvius, Nemprins, Pa tronins and Longinianus, who was Prafettus Prans of Italy. These were all Men Eminent in the State, but of the Inferior fort there fell Multitudes without Number. Stilicho was fill at Bononia when the Report of this Sedition was brought to him and in great Consternation call'd the Officers the Confederated Barbarians together, with whom he confulted what Course was proper to be caken, Stilicho at first was inform'd that the Emperor himfelf had miscarry'd in the Tumult, and therefore it was unanimously agreed among 'em, that if He norius was Slain, all the Confederates should fall up on the Roman Soldiers, and by chasting them restrain the rest; but if the Tempelt fell only upon the Magistrates, then the Ringleaders of the Muriny should be punish'd as an Example to the rell. By a fecond Express Stilicho was inform d that no Violence had been offer'd to the Emperor's Per fon, that the Mutiny was begun by Olympius his Procurement, and that none but his own Friends had fuffer'd in it; by this he faw they aim'd folely at him, and that it was time for him to confult his own Safety; whereupon he refolv'd to remove to Ravenna, a strong Town well inhabited, and at his Devotion; but Sarus, who commanded the Barbarians that were in Garrison there, seiz'd upon dilicho's Guards by Command from the Emperor, and order'd him to be taken into Cuftody; he having notice of it fled by Night into a Church of the Christians, from whence he was taken out the next Day by his own Confent, after the Soldiers had affirm'd upon Oath, in presence of the Bishop, that they had no Orders from the Emperor to kill, but

Chap. III. XLVIII. Hone. Theodofius II. 283

but fecurehim; however he was no fooner remov'd out of the Church before they produc'd fresh Letters from Honorius with a Warrant for his Death, which was executed accordingly on the put to twenty third of Angust. A. D. 408. the Senate Death. at the same time ordering his Name to be ras'd out of all Publick Places, and his Statues to be demolish'd. The Historians of those Times are not agreed in the Circumstances of this Execution, but concur to far in the Substance as we have related it. Zozimus indeed difagrees with himself, for whereas at first we were told of his Rapine and Oppression, his Luxury and Debauchery, he at parting reprefents him as a Man the most Modest of all others, who at that time were entrusted with the Management; for tho' he was nearly ally'd to the Emperor Theodofies, and had marry'd both his Daughters to his Son Honoring, tho' he had exercis'd the Oface of General for three and twenty Year's together, yet was his Son advanc'd to no higher Employment than Tribune of the Notaries, nor was he ever known to prefer any Person in the Army for the fake of his Mony, to that upon the whole he feems neither pleas'd with his Advancement nor Difgraces but in this he follows his old Maxim of arraignings as much as he can, the Actions of all Christian Princes, and might probably bear a greater Respect to the Cause and Person of Stilicho for the fake of his Son Encherins, who to make himself acceptable to the Heathens threaten'd, that if ever he should be advanced to the Imperial Dignity, he would begin his Reign with the Restitution of the Temples, and Destruction of Churches. Those, who are less partial to Scilicho's Memory, fay he justly deferved the Death he fuffer'd, that he introduc'd Alarich into Honorius his Dominions, and call'd the barbarous Nations into the West. After all we must

to

en

日本日

水が降を

p e:

R.

dis

ds

-

ď.

1 r,

2-

of

e rs

IJ,

ıt

Ro

qu

to ful

the

O if l

his

for des

cha

the Tr

bei

and

ho

yet Ha

ter En

gre

ral,

bot

WI tria

Re

the lyin

Oly

chu crea

his

Hor

Vigi

Me

Con-

must allow him to have been a very great States man, and a Person of very Excellent Qualities but that he was too much perverted by Ambrion which blinded and deftroy'd him. He was a Valiant Soldier, and Experienc'd General, ready in forming any Defign, and as successful in the Brecution of it. Honorius was fo implicitly guided in his Counsels by him, that for a long time he did nothing without his Approbation, fo that he feem'd to be more Absolute in the Empire than the Emperor himself, having a vast Capacity in the Manage ment of Affairs relating either to War or Peace.

Immediately after his Death his own Estate, and that of his Friends and Adherents, were by Publick Edict Confiscated to the Emperor's use. The mantia, the Empress, was depos'd and sent home to her Mother: Eucherius was seiz'd at Narmy, and convey'd from thence to Rome, where, by the Emperor's Order, he was put to Death. Theodofies was acquainted by Letters from Honorius of his Favourite's Death, and the occasion of it; a strict Alliance was concluded between em, and in puris ance of it they enter'd together into the Confulte, What follow'd upon Stilicho's Deash.

the this happen'd not 'till the Year following. The Emperor's Officers proceeded with great Severity against the Friends of Stilicho, and when the Soldiers that were Quarter'd up and down in the Cities of Italy heard of his Death, they flew instantly up on the Wives and Children of the Barbarians, wh upon Stilicho's Account, had enter'd into the Em peror's Pay, and putting all to the Sword feiz'd on whatever they had. This prov'd of very ill Consequence, for when their Husbands, Fathers and Relations heard of this abominable Cruelty, and the impious Violation of the Faith given them in a folemn manner by the Romans, they vow o Reyenge, and resolved to join with Alarieb, and in

Chap. MI. XLVIN Hono Theodofius II. 28;

in

ed ed

id

nd

ne

nd

中海流

社会 をある

ies de la constant de

-00

nd

nd

in

e. 10

01-

Conjunction with him enter into a Waragainst the Romans. Accordingly above thirty thousand of 'em quitted the Emperor's Service at once and retired towards Alexich, who at first feem'd cautious of receiving em, or giving Ear to their Proposals; for a full Year was not expired fince his last Peace with the Emperor, to whom he fent Messengers with Offers to confirm it, and to propose to him, That if he would raise him a small Sum of Mony to pay his Army their Arrears, and deliver up as Hoftages for performance of Articles Etins the Son of Gandenting, and Fason the Son of Jovins, he in exchange would fend him fome among the chiefest of the Nobility in his own Nation, and withdraw his Troops our of Noricum into Pannonia. Honorius being miss-led by ill Counsel rejected his Proposals, Offers reand so lost an Opportunity of making, if not a very jetted by honourable, at least a very advantageous Peace; and yet at the same time made no Provisions for a War. Had he mustered his Horces together from all Quara ters, and so disposed of em as to have stopped the Enemy in his Passage, or prevented his farther Progress; had he made choice of Sarus for his General, whole very Name was a Terror to the Enemy both for his Courage and Experience, and who had with him angreat Number of Barbarians that upon trial would have been found able to make a great Refistance, he had in some measure provided against the Attempts of so powerful an Adversary: But relying wholly upon the Advice and Humours of Olympius, he involv'd the State in great Calamities, chusing such Persons for his Generals, as at once created Contempt and Confidence in the Minds of his Enemies; for he gave the Command of the Horse to Turpillio, of the Foot to Varanes, and made Vigilantius General of the Troops of the Houshold, Men of little Courage, and less Experience The

C

fe Pt

th

an

be

un

di

fir

an

ope

ou

204 bat

Ba

M

duc

wh

tan

the

ord

the

wei

füc

oug

Nec

trer that

ly to

ed t ty t

ficu time

upo

thir

men

fently

The Year following Alarich fent for Asset for, his Wife's Brother, out of Pansonia, to come and join A. D. 409. him with the Hums and Goths which he had in great Numbers under him, and be his Affociate in the War; but without staying for his Arrival he began his March, in Execution of his mighty Defigns; and quitting Noricum he pass'd the Alps, and descended into Friuli, leaving Aquileia and Padus on

Italy.

He enters the left Hand: Palling the Po without any Oppolis tion, he drew near to Ravenna, and encamp'd will his Army in the Country adjoining to it. Plon thence he fent Ambassadors to Honorius, who was then lying in the Town, with Offers not only of Peace but of his Service, provided he and his Men might have some Habitations assign'd 'em in Italy; promising, upon that consideration, to serve him and the Empire faithfully. Tho' Henorius was fenfible Alarich's Forces were much superior to his and that he was unable to give him Battel, yet to lying upon the Strength of Ravenna, and other Cities that were well fortify'd, together with the Sup plies he expected out of the East, he was deaf to his Proposals, and answerd him with much Affir rance, that he was resolved never to condescend to any Offers he should make whilft he continued in Italy; out of which he advised him instanct; to me tire with his Army, unless he had a mind to be driven out by main Force, as he had been once before, which he had great reason to remember. Alarich, incens'd at this haughty Answer, mov'd with his Army towards Rimini and the Picentin, from thence into Umbria, call'd at present St. Peter's Patrimony. raging with Fire and Sword on every fide as he pass'd, to render himself the more terrible; and in this manner march'd directly to Rome, Ropping up all the Passages that led to it : By which means the City, which was crouded with Inhabitants, was pre-and marches to Rome.

.

nd on

かんゆ

745 of fex

te-

Ci-

to li.

10

-

mi-

ick,

his

nce

ny,

he

in

up

che

orently

fently reduced to Famine, which was attended by a Pestilence, proceeding from the unwholfome Diet they were forced in that Exigence to make use of, and the Infection of the Air arising from great numbers of the Dead that lay up and down the Streets unbury'd, which made that great Ciry look like a large Charnel-House. In this Extremity the Senate dispatch'd their Ambassadors out to Marten, to defire him either to grant 'em a Peace upon reasonable and moderate Terms, or give 'em leave so come out in Battel-Array, and fight it out with him in the open Field like true Romans. Upon this he burft out into a loud Laughter, and answer'd Thick Grass was easier out than thin. When they came to debate about a Peace he demanded with an infolent Barbanty all their Gold and Silver, all their rich Movembles, together with their Slaves, without which he was refolded mover to naife the Siege; and when he was ask'd what he would leave the Inhabitants, he toply'd sternty, Their Lives. Hereupon they define he would grant em a short Truce in order to a farther Treaty, which having obtain'd they return d into the City. The Heathens that were then in Rome, feeing themselves reduced to such Hardships began to cry aloud, that Recourse ought to be had to the Gods who had hererofore successed and preserv'd the City in the greatest Extremitter; and when fome Herrnfean Augurs affirm d that the only way to preferve the City was publickly to reftore the usual Sacrifices, the Senate confented to it: But so far was this from relieving the City that it labour'd every Day under fome new Difficulties. So that they were forc'd to treat a fecond time with the Barbarian, who agreed to raife the Siege upon Payment of five thousand Pounds of Gold, thirty thousand of Silver, four thousand filk Garments, three thousand Skins of Purple Dye, and as many many Pounds of Pepper; and for as much as a Sa fo immense could not be rais'd by any Tax to be laid upon the Citizens, they had therefore recou Alp про info best bou to h bay teen mor grea cus' diffr tia, grac ceed drev lent ! Alar there thou OR t Emp rich, the f pero > any all hi

marc lay S

Emp

ry fi in h

War

Bish

10 Ju

About

or,

to the Temples of the Heathen Gods, taking fre thence the Silver and Gold, and whatever rich On naments they found in 'em, and which had hitherto been apply'd to Idolatrous Purpoles, wherewith they made good the Deficiency. Alarich having received the Sum they agreed upon, retir'd with his As into Tuscany, without the Concurrence of Home to the Peace, tho' the Senate had fent and defind him to be included in it. For Constantine, who as we observ'd before had been declar'd Emperor, and had fettled himself in Gaul and a great part of Spain about this time fent his Amballadors to Honorius who were to ask his Pardon for that he had affum'd. the Imperial Title which had been fore'd upon him. Honorius not only admitted of his Excuse, but f him back the Imperial Habit, and affociated him the Empire, expecting he would come to his Affi ance against Alarich as he had promis'd; and in the Em- fides the Advantage of having but one Enemy deal with at a time, he thought it the readiest was to procure the Safety of his Kinfmen, Veronian al Didymius, of whose Murder he was at that time i This new Accommodation made Ho averse to any Thoughts of a Treaty with Alan tho' the Senate had fent their Deputies exprelly to him upon that account, and Alarich infifted upor nothing but being made Commander in chief of the Roman Armies, as well Horse as Foot; to which Honorius could by no means be brought to confent; urging that it would be a Disgrace to the Dignity of the Roman Majesty, and very prejudicial to the Empire; and fo the Messengers were sent back with out any fatisfactory Answer.

Honorius makes Constantine his Affociate pire.

289

About this time Analist, whom Alarich had fent for, as we observ'd before, had pass'd the Julian Alps; and was advanc'd into the Coasts bordering upon the Adrinick, with an Intent to join and reinforce Alarich's Army. Honorius drew out the best of his Forces garrison'd in the Towns thereabouts, and fentiem under the Conduct of Olympius to hinder fo dangerous a Conjunction; and they behav'd themselves so well that they kill'd above fifteen hundred of the Enemy with the Loss of no more than seventeen Men. Notwithstanding which great Piece of Service, Olympius, who had been accus'd as Author of all the present Calamities, being difmiss'd from Court, was forc'd to fly into Dalmaia, to prevent further Mischief; after whose Disgrace, Journs, the Profectus Pratorio of Italy, fucceeded as chief Minister of State to Honorius, and drew the Emperor into new Troubles. For being fent to propose some new Conditions of Peace to Alarich, in which he appear'd too forward, and therein offended the Emperor; upon his Return he thought to re-ingratiste himself by over-acting his part on the other Hand, and having first oblig'd the Emperor by Oath never to make Peace with Alarich, but wage perpetual War with him, he made the same himself, by touching the Head of the Emperor, and exacted it from all others that were in my Place or Authority. Alarich, enrag'd to fee all his Propositions for an Accommodation rejected. march'd from Rimini towards Rome, and refolv'd to by Siege to it a fecond time; but observing that the Emperor was raising great Bodies of Forces on every side, that he had entertain'd ten thousand Hunns in his Service, and confidering that the Fate of War is doubtful and precarious, he procur'd fome Bishops to go to the Emperor, and conjure him not 10 Suffer through his Neglect that City, which for

ut

VO

lar

the

ror

acc

of

rici

Co

gre

hin

fon

Con

COL

gre

fair

ry

eve

to 1

unc

mu

mie

Tece

anfi

him

ror,

Rob

defo

his

his

this

ping

lix

had to h mue

Arn

so many Ages had been Mistress of the World to be exposed as a Prey to the Barbarians, non give m her beautiful Buildings to be burnt and destroyd but to admit of such moderate Conditions as be me propos'd; which were only a small Sum of Many and Provisions for his Army, together with Opper and Lower Bavaria for their Habitations, which paid but an inconsiderable Tribute to the Empire, and were subject to the continual Invasions of their Neigh bours: In consideration of which he was ready contract a perpetual Friendsbip and Society in War with the Romans, and oblige himself to defend the Common-wealth against all her Enemies whatever All the World were surpriz'd at this suche and unexpected Modesty in Alarich, who declining di former Pretention, had of himself offer'd Condinons fo just and advantageous to the Empire, as a Affairs of the Emperor then stood, Notwing New Pro- standing which, Jovins and those of his Faction of

Alarich rejested by posals from pos'd all Overtures of Peace, alledging they lad bound themselves by a solemn Oath, sworn by Honorius. Head of the Emperor, never to make any Peace with Alarich; as if the Observance of a rash, and indee an unjust Oath, was to be preferr'd to the Walle of the State. Alarich therefore finding himles bus'd, march'd directly for Romes and as he ap proach'd near to the City, he fent for the principal Inhabitants, and acquainted em with Honorius his invincible Obstinacy, and threaten'd to take the Town by Force, unless the Citizens would join with him in a War against Honorius: Which when the left bitants could by no means be perfuaded to do the laid close Siege to the Town, took the Haven, and in it all the publick Provisions, which he threaten'd to distribute among his own Men, unless they in Stantly submitted. They, seeing the Necessity which they were reduc'd, and that they must un voidably

Chap.III.XLVIII.Hono. Theodofius II. 291

voidably perish for Hunger, conferred to what Alarich had propounded; fo that inviting him into the City they deliver'd him up Placidia, the Empefor's Sifter, as an Hoftage of their Fidelity, and according to his Command created Airalus, Prafect of the City, Emperor; who in return made Attaches talus Emrich General of the Army, and Terentlus, a Heathen, peror. Conful for the Year enfuing; distributing the other great Offices among Heathens and Arians, being Alarich advis'd him to fend himself an Arian. some Troops of Barbarians into Africk, under the Command of Drumas, to remove Herachan, who commanded there for the Emperor, and might be a great Hindrance to him in the Progress of his Affairs: But in this and other things he acted contral ry to the Advice of Alarich, and behav dhimself in every respect like a Man whose Authority was like to be of a very short Continuance.

tenid

11

lably

With the Succours he received from Alarich he undertook to beliege Honorius in Ravenna, who much terrify'd at the Approach of to many Enemies fworn to his Destruction, fent and offer d to receive him as his Partner in the Empire; but was answerd, That Attalus was fo fat from suffering him to enjoy so much as the simple Name of Emperor, that after he had stripped him of his imperial Robes, he would confine him to some remote and desolate Mand, where he should spend the rest of his Days in Obscurity, glad he had so escap a with his Life. The poor Emperor was so confounded at this prodigious Arrogance, that he thought of efcaping to his Nephew Theodofius; but at that instant fix Cohorts, confifting of four thouland Men, that had been formerly fent for out of the East, arriv'd to his Affiftance, which encouraged him to contimue at Ravenna in expectation of the Success of his Arms in Africk; concluding if Heraclian prevail'd

.(

fa

H

ty

di

W

m

m tal

201 pel

Ra

he

Co

hii

he

pir

the

Ac

felv

Ar

me

the

fho

cau

reft

his

had

he :

Wit

dec

ty (

the

fell

and

con

rins

grea

he should, with the Accession of his Forces, be able to make head against Attalus and Alarich.

Whilst the War rag'd with such Violence in the midst of Italy, the Provinces abroad labour'd under equal Difficulties, for whilst some were daring to throw off the Authority of the Empire, otherspressum'd to usurp it; but Honorius was too much employ'd at home to have any leisure to look abroad. So that all things were manag'd in Gaul and Spain, according to the Will and Pleasure of those that were strongest.

Alarich was willing more closely to beliege Honorins in Ravenna, which Attalus had block'd up by the Forces under his Command, expecting the Success of his Arms in Africk; and when Alarich understood they had been defeated by Heraclian, he began to be weary of his new Emperor, whom he found unequal to fo great a Charge. His Averfion to him was improved by some near Attalus, who had been regain'd to the Emperor's Interest, and made the Goth believe that Attalus had a Defice upon his Life, the better to assure himself of the which he scorn'd to hold upon precarious Empire, This the King was more inclinable to be lieve, when he observ'd that by the ill Conduct of Attalus their Affairs were quite ruin'd in Africk; that Heraclian had feiz'd upon all the Ports, and thereby put a Stop to the Importation of any Com, or other Merchandise, into Italy. This created a great Famine throughout the Country, which was increas'd for that the Lands, by reason of the Wars, had not been till'd for feveral Years; but no Place felt it so grievously as Rome, where Men were ready to devour one another, and several Mothers were reported to have fed upon their own Infants; so that Alarich seeing the publick Calamities encrease through the Folly of those who had the Government of Affairs,

Chap.III.XLVIII. Hono. Theodosius II. 293

able

the

der

to

PAC-

em-

oad.

ajn,

иете

Der

by uc-

un-

he

he

Thvho

and

fer

the

he-

t of ick;

and

orp, d,a

W4S

ars,

acc

164 rece

hat

Af-

urs,

fairs, fent his Ambassadors once more to treat with Honorius, promising to Strip Artalus of that Dignity with which he had invested him. The Conditions were readily accepted by the Emperor, who on his part offer'd to agree to all his Demands. Hereupon Alarich return'd with his Ar- and Demy towards Rome, where he publickly depriv'd At Erades him talus of the Imperial Purple, which he fent to Ho-"gain. norius, detaining the Usurper and his Son Ampelius Prisoners. After which he return'd towards Ravenna, there to confirm the Peace, on Condition he was made Co-Partner in the Empire, and some Commodious Part of Gaul was affign'd him for himself and his Men; in Consideration of which he would be ready to affilt Honorius and the Empire upon all Occasions whatfoever. Both the Heathens and the Arians were much offended at this Accommodation, for the one had promis'd themfelves mighty Advantages, Attalus himfelf being an Arian, and the other no less than a Re-establishment of their Idolatry, which he had promis'd them. But this peaceable Face of Affairs was shortly after chang'd by the means of Sarus, be- Sarus precause it no ways countenanc'd his particular Inte-vents an rest. He had great Numbers of Barbarians under dation. his own Independent Command, with which he had for fome time observ'd a Neutrality; but when he found Ataulfus, who was his Mortal Foe, join'd with Alarich, he began to apprehend his Power, and declare openly for Honorius; Tho' he knew a Treaty of Peace had been concluded between him and the Goths, yet with three hundred of his Men he fell upon the Goths, who expected no fuch Usage, and kill'd a great Number of 'em. Alarich, who Rome Taconcluded that what Sarus had done was by Hono-ken. rins his Participation and Consent, departed in a great Rage, and went with his Army that continu'd encamp'd 10

ed

Ba

rec

an,

for afte

gea

Rot

fect Var

dat

3 4715 65

encamp'd near Rome, which he press'd closer than ever, and at last took it, whether by Force on Str. tagem is hard to be determined, for the Hiftenis that have written of it are not agreed among then felves in that Point, any more than to the particular time of the Year in which it was taken; for form fay it was on the first of April, others on the twenry fourth of August, which feems the most likely, Thus that City, which for many Ages together had pillag'd the rest of the World, and enrich the felf with the Spoils of other Nations, sufferding in her turn, and beheld that with which the usd to feed her Pride and Luxury fall into the Hands of Barbarians, her declar'd Enemies; there was hardly a House throughout that vast and opulent City but what fuffer'd in the common Calamity, feveral of 'em being fet on Fire by the infolent Soldiers ofter they had been riff'd. Alarich, before he broke into it, forbad his Soldiers, at the Peril of their Lives, from molesting those that fled for Sanctuary into the Churches, especially those of the Holy 1. postles. He gave 'em free Liberty to plunder where they pleas'd, only they were commanded to abflain from things confecrated to Holy Uses, and to foil the Blood of none but fuch as they found in Arms, and endeavouring to make Resistance. Several Pagans observing the particular Favour shown the Christians turn'd Christians too, and fled with them for Safety into their Churches, the Preservation of which, and the extraordinary Respect shown em by the Goths in the midst of so horrible a Confusion, whilst their own Idolatrous Temples were industrioufly burnt and deftroy'd, they look'd upon as miraculous. Three Days did the City fuffer under the Tyranny of the Barbarians, who on the third quit ted it of their own accord, and left it in " much better Condition than the Gauls or Ne-

Chap.III. XLVIII Hono. Theodofius II. 295

re had done, whose brutish Wantonness exceeded the more generous Anger of the Victorious Barbarian; so that this seem'd a shaking of the Rod over the Proud City, rather than a thorough Correction; a Depunciation of God's Anger, and not an Execution of his Judgments: Happy had it been for her if she could have taken Warning, and not after so many Trials have forced the Divine Vengeance down upon her Head. This Captivity of Rome sell out in the 18th Year of Honorius, the second of the 297th Olympiad, in the Consulship of Varanes and Tertullus, in the 1163d after her Foundation, A. D. 410, the substitute grant of the second of the second of the

Continue to the second of the second the Asserting the to be an interest to the

TO THE SHIP SOLD THE WAY OF THE SHIP SHIPS

A 14 14 Set to cheft

Acres of the Carrier of the Acres of the Carrier and the second second

8.4

Mary Mary State (1997)

A S AND HIS SERVICE STATE OF THE SERVICE SERVI

136

of

iry, oral

af-

oke

heir

aly

pill

ms,

Pa-

the

of

on,

miehe

oite veU4 CHAP.

mentality to the stable plu

Ac

fev

De

fuc had and

bu

of

bui W

the

em

be

vei

anc

or

bei

Ho

Al

W

fo

hir

ret of

Go

he

ter

fu:

an

th

tir

CHAP. IV.

From the Taking of Rome by the Goths, to the Total Failure of the Western Empire in Augustulus.

Containing the Space of Sixty Six Years.

I. A Larich having now in his Power the Imperial City, might eafily have fix'd himfelf there, and with his Triumphant and Victorious Army have made War upon Honorius, and by degrees have united the Body of the Empire to the Head; but whether it proceeded from the want of good Counsel, or the secret Pleasure of Divine Providence, he knew not how to make an advantageous use of his Victory, nor secure the Conquest he had with much Labour and Difficulty obtain'd. Driven out by an Almighty Hand, rather than of his own Accord, his straggling Troops rowd through Campania, Lucania, and Calabria, wasting the Country, and loading themselves with the Wealth of it; of which when he thought it fufficiently drain'd, and had gratify'd his Humour to the full upon the Continent, he thought of passing, with his Army, over into Sicily, there to act the fame Cruelties over again. Accordingly he drew his Forces down to Rhegium, where they were Embark'd; but by that time he was got out to Sea a violent Tempest seiz'd him, which beat him back upon the Coasts of Calabria, where he fell upon Consentia, a strong Town, that refus'd to admit him, and having taken it by Force he gave it up to be plun-

A. D. 411.

Chap.IV. XI.VIII. Hono. Theodofius II. 297

Vara

Train.

//A

felf

OUS

de-

the of

ro-

ige-

t he

n d. of

n'd

ing

the

Hi-

to

Ing,

the

rew m-

2 2 ack

pon mit

be

un-

plunder'd by his Soldiers. Here, as he was confidering what farther Course he was to take for the Advancement of his Affairs, he was suddenly seiz'd The Death with a Fit of Sickness, which carry'd him off in a of Alarich. few Days. The Goths exceedingly lamented the Death of their King, under whole Conduct they had perform'd fuch great Exploits, and met with fuch extraordinary Success. Left the Romans, who had been so often defeated by him, should come and offer an Indignity to his Bones after he was bury'd, they turn'd the Course of the River Busento, by digging a great Canal for the Reception of the Water, and in the midst of the Channel they bury'd their King, and with him abundance of their Wealth, after which they reftor'd the Waters to their right Course, and kill'd all the Slaves they had employ'd in the Work, that no Discovery might be made of the Place. This Solemnity being over, they consulted about the Choice of a new King, and, after a short Deliberation, it fell upon Athaulph, Athaulph, or Adolph, Brother-in-Law to the Deceas'd; who, madeking, being thus promoted, marry'd Placidia, Silter of Placidia. Honorius, who had been detain'd as an Hostage by Alarich, but us'd with much Honour by him. This happen'd well to the Roman Empire, for being a Woman of good Address, and great Discretion, she fo far infinuated her felf into him, that she inclin'd him which way the pleas'd. He had a Defign of returning back to Rome, of taking it a fecond time, of fettling himself there, and intended to call it Gothia instead of Rome, the very Name of which he had a great Ambition to obliterate; but she so temper'd him by her Prayers, Entreaties and Perfuafions, that a Treaty was concluded betwixt him and the Emperor upon the same Foot with his Brother's, which was that he should quit Italy, and retire into Gaul where a commodious Track should be

C

att

WI

tha

thi

all

COL

mi

det

not kill

of

Wa:

He

dif

Po

afte

Re

hin

wh

ing

As

Con

he

fent

riu.

on

det

for

Qu

and

and

ten

foll

of

his

be affigued for him and his new Subjects; second ingly he went and fettl'd in Gullin Nurbonsenske, where he was acknowledg'd as King, and Alhe of the Romans, whom he honeftly affifted afterwards in their Gallie Wats; prefently after this the Thatis. tants of Rome, who had left it in the time of Dan ger, feeing the Storm at last blown off, and that there was fome appearance of Peace, return'd in fuch great Numbers, that shortly after the Town was grown as populous as ever. Chipada Tarana

Constanout again;

And now there was hardly any left able to ditine breaks fturb the Publick Peace but Conftantine, who, as we observed before, was received by Honoring into a Partnership of the Empire, upon a Promise of his Fidelity for the future, which he had not Honour enough to observe, but broke out shortly after in hopes of feizing Italy in the midft of fo many Pubhick Confusions; whereupon Honorius, in Confideration of his restless turbulent Spirit, was refolv'd, if possible, to destroy him; and making Constantius, a Roman of great Nobility, Valourand Prudence, his Lieutenant-General, he fent him in to Guel with a powerful Army. Constantine was at that time Belieg'd in Arles by Geronius, who had been formerly his Commander in Spain, but having received fome Unkindness from him, fought at prefent neither for him nor Honorius, but labour'd to raise one Maximus, an Emperor of his own the fing; whilft he was preffing the Siege Constanting arriv'd with the Army under his Command, whereupon Geroneius knowing his Forces to be inferior to his rais'd the Siege, and fled into Spain with as many of his Troops as would follow him, for a great many of his Men, neither approving of his Conduct nor his Cause, Went over to Conflancias. Geromins his ill Fortune purfu'd him into Spain, where the Soldiers, offended at him for his frameful Flight, attack'd attack'd hinvin his own House, which he defended with much Courage; and being affifted by no more than one Friend, and a few Slaves, he kill'd above three hundred of them, fighting obstinately till all their Weapons were fpent, and then the Slaves confulted their own Safety and fled. Gerontius might with ease have fav'd himself too, but was detain'd by his Love to his Wife, whom he could not be perfuaded to forfake, who begg'd him to kill her rather than fuffer her to fall into the Hands of his Enemies; wherefore when he found there was no room left for Hope, he first cut off the Head of his Friend, after that his Wife's, and then dispatch'd himself.

In the mean time Constantius had taken up his Post, and was laying close Siege to Constantine, who after a Defeat of a Party that was marching to his Relief, and a Defence for four Months, divested himself of the Purple, and retir'd into the Church, where he got himself to be Ordain'd a Priest, thinking that Character sufficient to preferve his Life. As foon as it was known to the Inhabitants, and Constantius had taken an Oath for their Indemnity, he was received into the Town, and immediately fent away Constantine and his Son Julian to Honorius, by whose Order they were put to Death up- to Death.

on the Road.

11

世 多曲

100

hat

oin

Wn

di-

123 nto his

our

in

b-fires

ng

ind

in-723

he

bút

ht rd

H.

ins

re)

ior

ES

10

on-

Sh-

ht.

k'd

The Fate and Punishment of Constantine could not Jovinus deter others from aiming at the like Usurpations; Usurps in for at this time Jovinus, a Man of great Power and Gaul, Quality in Auvergne, usurp'd the Imperial Title, and by the Affiftance of the Franks, Burgundians and Germans, was preparing to make good his Pretenfions, but was overthrown by Constantius, who follow'd him to close that he was forc'd to fly out of the Country, after Constantius had taken most of his Ad herents and put 'em to Death. After deli

Ch

to t

to F carr

and to f

Roa

And

by 1

VICE

and

befo

Ado

Peo

the pire

taly

the bein emb

ance bule

fion Ado

tius

Em

Conj

cauf

fo t my

to Z

he t

ver'd quit

Con

fuati Sieg

frick.

and Hera- After Jouinus follow'd Heraclian, who the fame clian in A- Year usurp'd in Africk; he being a Man of Power Interest and Authority, put Italy at first into a great Consternation, especially when by detaining the Annual Supply of Corn they began to be great want of Provisions. Heraclian had commanded the Emperor's Armies in Africk, had been very fuccessful in his Services in that Province, and was defign'd Conful for the enfuing Year, all which Considerations made his Rebellion more extraordi-

413.

A. D. nary, and the Issue more doubtful; he Mann'd out a very strong Fleet of Ships, and no less, according to Orofius, than three thousand seven hundred Sail. therein out-doing the Naval Strength of Xerxes and Alexander the Great. With this Fleet he fet Sail. and after he had rov'd along upon the Italian Coaft he landed his Men, and put Rome into a great Consternation; but Marinus, one of the Emperor's Commanders, march'd out against him at the Head of the Roman Youth, and Veteran Troops of the Empire, which made a brave Appearance, and quite dishearten'd the Usurper; who, without trusting to the iffue of an Engagement, fled in great Precipitation, and getting on Board a small Chaloup, set

Sail for Carthage, where he was kill'd the Year

Heraclian kill'd.

following by one of his own Soldiers. In the mean while Constantins was builty employ'd in Gaul, which by this time was to far fettl'd through his Industry and Success, that of all those barbarous Nations that first follow'd Godin gist thither, none remain'd but the Burgundian, Natives originally of that Tract of Land that lyes between the Oder and the Vistula, but quitting their own Country came with the rest of the Barbarians into Gaul. Constantius thought fit to march against'em, but they finding he was likely to prove too strong for 'em, petition'd him for Peace, and defir'd

Chap. IV. XLVIII. Hono: Theodosius II. 101

The second

ery

was

ich

di

out

ing

ail,

and

ail.

patt

On-

3 10

ead

the

ste

to ipi-

fet

ear

THE

m-

far of

de

IMI,

yes

gni

arrch

ove

and ir d defir'd they might be admitted as Friends and Allies to the Romans. Constantius thought it not prudent to provoke 'em too far, left fome unexpected Mifcarriage Gould fully the Reputation of his Arms; and therefore granting their Demands, gave em leave to fettle themselves upon the Banks of the Rivers Rodanus or the Rhone, and the Soane, call'd by the Ancients Araris: After this Constanting was fent for by the Emperor to Rome, where for his fignal Services he was rewarded with the Honour of Conful and Patrician, but had not long continu'd at Rome before new Commotions recall'd him abroad; for Adolph, King of the Goths, a warlike and restless People, taking his Advantage of the Wars he faw the Romans engag'd in, began to disturb the Empire. He had brought Attalus with him out of Italy, and now persuaded him once more to re-assume makes Atthe Imperial Purple, and act the Emperor: Attalus peror again being a Man of a fickle ambitious. Temper readily embrac'd the Occasion, and by his Patron's Assistance raisid a very powerful Army, confishing of turbulent unruly People, fond of Novelty and Confution. Hereupon Honorius declar'd both him and Adolph Enemies to the Empire, and made Conftan- and Adolph Emperor's Right Hand and Ruckler of the nemies to Emperor's Right Hand, and Buckler of the State. the Empire. Constanting the more readily accepted the Service because he had no great Kindness for the Gothick King, so that departing from Arles at the Head of his Army in the Beginning of the Spring he march'd up to Narbonne, where Adolph kept his Court, whom he threaten'd with a Siege unless Attalus was deliver'd up to him. Placidia advis'd her Husband to quit the Interest of the Usurper, and comply with Constantius; but when the King could by no Perfuations be prevail'd upon to do it, Constantius laid Siege to the Place, and press'd him so hard that Adolph

A. D. 414.

Adolph talus Em-

Attalus

201 pe

Pe

€0

the

Re

Ho

At

fin

mi

aln

of

G

in rag

Co

alti

dat

wh

con

ety

Im

felf

an a

fo I

jea

not

Feu

as t

Ty (

in

Tu

twe

the

ter,

dolphieeing there was no possibility of a Relief though of leaving the Town and transporting his Goths into Africk; of which Constantins being aware he feled upon all the Gallies and other Veffels riding near the Coast, so that he was forc'd to alter his Measures and fly, together with Artalus, into Spain, where he feiz'd upon Barcellona. Here fome of the Go. thick Soldiers, who had no great Kindness for All talus, laid hold fuddenly upon him, and carry dhim Prisoner to Constantins, who put him in Chains and fent him to the Emperor, by whom he was referred to be led in Triumph at the End of the War.

As foon as the Vandals understood the Gorns were fettling themselves in Spain, and like to be their Attalus taken.

Neighbours, they thought it their Bufinessto prevent 'em before it was too late, and accordingly by their Ambassadors to Honorius advis'd him to be at Peace with both Parties, and leave em to fight it out between themselves, for whatever Side prevails he was fure to be a Gainer; which was a Maxim Honorius afterwards observed, to the great Ease and Benefit of the Empire. In the mean time Placials had again importun'd her Husband to renew the Peace with Honorius, which he could no longer to fuse to a Wife he lov'd so tenderly, and who had fo great a Power over him. But the Goths, who were of a quite contrary Inclination, and thought Peace prejudicial to their Honour and their Interest, murder'd him and fix of his Children, promoting flain by his Sigerich to be King in his stead; who being of the same Principles in a short time after suffer'd the fame Fare, and was succeeded by Wallia, a Man of a more warlike Genius, whose first Attempt was to transport his Goths into Africk; but being driven back by a Tempest he enter'd into a Treaty with Constantins, to whom he deliver'd up Placidia, the Emperor's Sister, and was to be esteem'd a Friend and Adolph own Subgeets.

Chap IV. XLVIII Mono. Theodofius II. 303

and Allie of the Romans, upon Condition he made perpetual Wer with the Vandals in Spain. The Peace being thus concluded Conframins returned with Placidia to Rome, where by the Confest and Encouragement of Honorius he was marry'd to her, to Constanthe great Satisfaction of the People, whose publick tius mar-Rejoycings were prolong d by the Solemnity of cidia. Honorius his Triumph, in the Conclusion of which Attalus had his Right Hand cut off, and was confin'd to the Ille of Lipare.

ed che es, ere

Go-

Al-

im

and

v'd

ere

reir

ore-

by

at tit

ard min

and

dia

the

TC-

had

vho

ght eft, ing

die

the

of

s to

ven

vitt.

the

end

ind

During all these Commotions and publick Calamities, with which the Western Empire had been almost overthrown, the East, by a particular Favour of Providence, enjoy'd a profound Peace, under the Government of Theodofius, an Infant; God feeming in an especial manner to favour him, for the Encouragement Christian Piety found, not only in his own Court but almost throughout his Empire. Ecclesiaffical Writers are very particular in their Commendations of this Prince, and of his Silter Pulcheria, who was two Years older than the Emperor, and in confideration of her great Wildom, Virtue, and Piery, was created Augusta, and shar'd with him the Imperial Power, or rather had all religned up to her felf; for the govern'd both him and the Empire with an absolute Authority, and administer d Affairs with fo much Prudence, that he was belowd by his Subjects, and formidable to his Enemies. Yet could not all her Care and Circumspection prevent frequent Feucanting upon the Account of Religion, which as they begun in an ungovernable Zeal, to they very often ended in Blood, as it happen'd at this time in Alexandria, a City notoriously remarkable for Tumules and Seditions. Some flight Difputes be Asedition tween the Christians and the Jews, who inhabited at Alexanthere in great Numbers, fo far exasperated the lat dria. ter, that they refolv'd upon a cruel Revenge, espe-

ry'd to Pla-

A. D. 417.

cially

C

of

and

dia

the

wh

Wa

lofo

the

nef

phe

mer

her

ord

ed l

but

fect

Was

bety

feve

dur of h

ftrip

buri

brou

ing

of C

Ten

time

Aut

pren

next

drop

liver

the !

the :

T of V

mity with Cyrill, Bishop of the Place. They agreed among themselves to let upon the Christians in the Night-time, and massacre all they could ger into their Hands: And the better to execute their Bloody Defign, they hir'd fome Apostate Christians to cry out in the dead of Night, that one of the chief Churches in the City was in Flames; whereupon the Christians ran in great Confusion out of their Houses to extinguish the Fire: But the lews, who were all arm'd, and knew each other by a certain Mark of Distinction which they wore for that purpose, kill'd all as they came out into the Streets, without any Mercy. The Bishop, being highly provok'd at fo great a Barbarity, went attended with multitudes of Christians to the Synagogues, while the Jews were affembled there, where infinite Numbers of 'em were murder'd, the rest forc'd out of the City, and their Houses plunder'd. The Pizfect was fo much offended at this, that the St. Cyrill did all he could to appeale and mollifie him, he cially when they found themselves favour'd and protected by the Præfect of the City, who was at En-raise Diflurbances.

A bloody

Massacre.

never would liften to any Accommodation. The The Monks Noise of this Uproar came to the Ears of the Monks living upon the neighbouring Mountains, who to the number of five hundred came down and infulted the Præfect as he was riding in his Chariot, calling him Idolater, Heathen and Unbeliever; tho' he at the same time declar'd himself a Christian, and that he had been Baptiz'd by Attiens, Bishop of Constantinople. This ferv'd only to enrage em the more, infomuch that one among em, call'd Ammonius, broke his Head with a Stone, and had almost kill'd him, whilft his Attendants forfook him for tear of being murder'd, and hid themselves in the Croud, But the People, provok'd at the outragious Infolence of these Monks, fell upon 'em, and drove em out of

Chapily. XLVIII. Hono. Theodofius II. 305

П

n-

ans get

Ai-

of

reof

WS,

er-

hat

ets,

hly

ith

ilft

m

of

2-

he he

he

nks

ted

cal-

po, nd

of

the

mo-

oft

ear

ud.

out

ot

of the City, feizing on Ammonius their Ringleader, and deliver'd him up to the Governor, who immediately put him to Death. This ferv'd to widen the Breach between the Bishop and the Præfect, which occation'd great Disorders in the City, and was fatal to Hypatia, the Daughter of Theon the Philosopher, a young Lady, so well acquainted with all the Sects in Philosophy, that for Learning and Quicknels of Apprehention the exceeded all the Philosophers of that Age; and which was a greater Ornament than all the rest, she was no less remarkable for her Modesty, Meekness, and Chastity. These extraordinary Qualifications made her Conversation courted by the Princes and great Men of the Province, but the was intimate with none more than the Præfect, which Intimacy cost her her Life, for she was accused as one that hinder'd an Accommodation between the Governor and the Bishop; whereupon leveral of the People, among whom one Peter a Ledurer in a Church was Ringleader, forc'd her out of her Coach, dragg'd her into a Church, where they tripp'd her, mangl'd her Body, kill'd her, and then burnt her to Ashes. This Action, saith Socrates, brought a great Scandal upon Cyrill and his Flock, being so much unbecoming those who make a Profession of Christianity: And we may likewise observe the Temper of the Monks of those Times. About this time Innocent, the Pope of Rome, began to affert his Authority over other Bishops, and to claim a Supremacy, which was as earnestly challeng'd by his next Successor Zozimus, nor has the Claim been dropp'd ever fince.

The Year following was remarkable for the Birth Valentiof Valentinian the Third, of whom Placidia was denian III.
liver'd at Ravenna; but more for a great Eclipse of Born.
the Sun and other Assidents, that much alarm'd the Sun, and other Accidents, that much alarm'd the Minds of the People, for it was follow'd with

X

Cl

ftru

the

not

Th

pet

he

Eff

was

Pul

the

odo

ima

Inte

Ad

con Aff

Wa

Kin

the

in 1

as v

the

bet

who

at t

cut

mir

the

bur

fus'

nou

and

lifh

Fait

fan

Co

ftructed.

fo great a Drought, that Men and Cattle du'd in great Numbers; after which enfu'd most dreadful Earthquakes, accompany'd with Fire that fell from Heaven, which put Men into a Mortal Fear but did little Hurt, for whilst like so many Waves it was overwhelming whole Countries, a fudden and great Wind arose, by which it was driven into the Sea. and quench'd in the Waters.

Not long after this Honorius, who had no Children, began to think of an Affociate and Successor, who might share with him in the Difficulties of the State whilst he liv'd, and be a Support to the Empire after his Death. His own Experience and the Constanti- Peoples Yows made him cast his Eyes upon Constant us declar'd tius, who was accordingly proclaim'd Augustus with Augustus, much Solemnity, and his Son Valentinian declard tinian, Cz. Casar. But as this was done without the Consent or Knowledge of Theodosius he never approv'd of it, nor would he give Audience to the Ambassadors sent by Honorius upon that account, nor receive the Pi-Aure of Constantius, fent, as the Custom was, to be plac'd with his own. This Indignity highly concern'd Constantius, who thought his ten Years successful Service in the Wars against Usurpers and Barbarians well deserv'd the Honour Honorius had conferr'd upon him, and therefore he prepar'd to force Theodosius to a Recognition, and be revenged Constanti- upon him for the Affront, but dy'd at Ravenva of us dies at a Pleurisie, occasion'd by an immoderate Grief contracted upon that Account. 'Tis not improbable but Theodosius might be the more averse to Constantius his Promotion because he then began to think of marrying himself, as he did not long after to Endocia, Daughter of Leontins the Athenian Philofopher: Her first Name was Athenais, which at her

Baptism was chang'd, by Attieus, Bishop of Constantinople, for Endocia. Her Father had so well in-Ravenna.

Chap. IV. XLVIII. Hono. Theodosius II. 307

D

in

lful

mon

did

Was

reat

Sea,

hil

Tor.

s of

the

the

tan-

rith

ard

ent

it,

lent

Pi-

be

onug-

and

had

to g'd

of

on-

ble

AM:

ink

to

lo-

her

011-

in-

ted

structed her in Philosophy, in the Mathematicks, the Languages and the Sciences, that the equall'd if not exceeded the greatest Professors in those Times. These Riches of the Mind Leontins thought a competent Fortune for his Daughter, for which reason he difinherited her by his last Will, and left all his Estate to her two Brothers; whereof, as soon as he was dead, she went and complain'd to Pulcheria: Pulcheria, admiring her extraordinary Beauty, and the great Endowments of her Mind, perfuaded The- Theodofiodosius to marry her; which she did, as some have us marries. imagin'd, out of Policy, and Regard to her own Interest, concluding that Athenais, who ow'd her Advancement entirely to her, would fuffer her to continue absolute in the Management of Publick Affairs.

These Occurrences happen'd not 'till after the War was broken out between Theodofius and the King of Persia, who had broken the League with the Empire, and horribly perfecuted the Christians in his Dominions. Whilft Isdegerdes liv'd, who, as we observ'd before, had been appointed Tutor to the Emperor, he preserv'd a good Understanding betwixt the two Crowns; but his Son Vararanes, who fucceeded him, was of a different Temper, and at the Instigation of the Magirais'd a bloody Persecution against the Christians throughout all his Dominions, which was imputed in a great measure to the indifferent Zeal of a Bishop call'd Andas, who burnt one of the Persian Temples, and when he refus'd to re-build it, according to the Sentence pronounc'd against him, the King put him to Death; and order'd all the Christian Churches to be demolish'd, and proceeded with such Violence against the A Perfecu-Faithful, that they came in great Numbers to Con-tion in Perfantinople, where Atticus receiv'd em with much fia. Compassion, and stirr'd up the Emperor in their Behalf.

fo

Co

the

the

wh

pro

lie

ral

Ac

not

Ch

per

fad

bei

fano

fit

to :

his

atte

was

he

aga

Eft

of

mai

Am

in t

mu

Biff

get

by .

of i

thei

ly 1

Dee

Vell

mise

Behalf. But lest this Provocation should not be thought Grounds sufficient for a War, the Persians detain'd some Workmen they had hir'd out of the Roman Territories, who were to dig in some Mines of Gold they had lately discover'd, and were to be return'd back after they had perform'd the Work they were hir'd for; and as an Aggravation of all the rest, they robb'd and abus'd several Roman Merchants that traded into their Country. The King of Persia first began, by demanding back his Subjects, whom he had driven out of his Country by the Heat of his Persecution: But the Romans were fo far from delivering those miserable People into his A War Hands, that they declar'd War against him; and with Persia, Theodosius immediately rais'd an Army, constituting Ardabarius his General, who overthrew Narles Commander of the Persian Army, in the Province of Azazena, flew a great Multitude of his Men, and forc'd him to fly. Narses thought to redeem his lost Credit by invading the Roman Borders, which he hop'd to effect on the fide of Mesopotamia, destitute at that time, and unprepar'd for a Defence; The Roman General was quickly fensible of his Motions, and therefore march'd with all speed into Mesopotamia, frustrated his Design, and Besiegd him in Nisibis, at that time in the Hands of the Per-Vararanes having by this time receiv'd Intelligence of his General's Overthrow, and the Danger his Army and the City was in, made all the halte he could to his Relief, calling into his Assistance & lamundurus, Prince of the Saracens, a haughty, vainglorious Man, who promis'd the King not only to raise the Siege of Nisibis, but deliver the beautiful City of Antioch into his Hands. But his Attempts were no way answerable to his arrogant Promises, nor his Success to either; for a Dissention first rose among his Men, and after that a Panick Fear feizd

Chap.IV.XLVIII. Hono. Theodosius II. 209

be

ians

the

ines

be

ork

- 40

1er-

ing

ub-

by

ere

his

and

ing

fes,

e of

and his ich der

ce do por de la contra del contra de la contra del la contra de la contra de la contra del la contra ots es,

le d

fo

to violently upon 'em, that flying away in great Confusion at the very Appearance of the Romans, they took the River Euphrates, where an hundred thousand of 'em are said to have perish'd. After which the Romans being inform'd the King was approaching with a great number of Elephants to relieve the Town, they rais'd the Siege, but in feveral Engagements which follow'd foon after got the in which Advantage, and very much weaken'd the Enemy; the Ronotwithstanding which, Theodosius, who had the mans have the better. Character rather of a good Prince than a great Emperor, was inclinable to Peace, and fent his Ambaffadors to treat with Vararanes accordingly; but he being reinforc'd with a fresh Supply of ten thoufand Men, who call'd themselves Immortals, thought fit to try his Fortune once more before he listen'd to an Accommodation; but when he heard that all his bold Immortals were cut off by the Romans, he attended feriously to the Proposals of Peace, which was granted to him by Theodosius, upon Condition he put a stop to the Persecution he had rais'd against the Christians, and restor'd em to their Estates and Privileges. The Valour and Conduct of the Roman Generals in this War was very remarkable, but the Charity of Acacius, Bishop of The Chari-Amida, was more extraordinary. The Romans had ty of Acain this Town above feven thousand Prisoners, who cius, Bishop must all have perish'd with Hunger had not this of Amida. Bishop reliev'd 'em. He summon'd his Clergy together, and told 'em God was not so much serv'd by the Vessels of Gold or Silver, which the Piety of Devout Christians had dedicated to the use of their Church, but in Actions of Charity, Brotherly Love and Munificence, and that it would be a Deed worthy their Holy Profession to sell those Vessels, and apply the Mony to the Relief of such miserable Wretches that were now ready to perish among among 'em. Hereupon, by the Approbation and Confent of all his Clergy, he melted the Plate converted it into Mony, with part of which he ranfom'd the Captives, and distributed the rest among em for their Subfistence. The King of Perfia was fo nearly affected with fuch a transcendent Ad of Charity, that he confess'd the Romans knew how to Conquer as well by their Liberality as the Power of their Arms, and earnestly desir'd to see the Bishop that had so highly oblig'd 'em. Acacins receiv'd Orders from Theodosius to satisfie his Curiofity, and by his Presence encreas'd the great Opinion Vararanes had conceiv'd of him, who after that grew more mild and indulgent to the Chri-Stians.

A. D. 422. Spain.

In the mean time Honorius observing how much the Goths and Vandals had by their continual Wars A War in weaken'd each other in Spain, thought their Divifions gave him a fair Opportunity of recovering it to the Roman Empire, to which purpose he sent two powerful Armies thither, one by Land under the Command of Castinus, and the other by Sea from Africk under the Command of Boniface, who was Governor in that Country. They were, with out Contradiction, two of the most experienc'd Soldiers Honorius had in all his Dominions, and therefore he join'd 'em in Commission, that they might with equal Power and Command promote his Service in Spain. At first there appear'd an happy Understanding and Unanimity between em, which produc'd Effects very advantageous to the Emperor's Interest and their own Reputation; for they got fovinus and Maximus into their Hands, two of the late Usurpers, who were still aiming at Innovations; they worked the Barbarians in feveral Encounters, and forc'd 'em almost to a Necessity of Submission; but this friendly Correspondence Fel-

Fe hat hin fpil but bar unf jud

fua

wh last

eng twe

mu ner it. Pik.

Fri was feve

Lo a B tun

imp Ch Eaf

The Con

was Sift who

En real

beti

had her

Chap. IV. XLVIII. Hono. Theodosius. II.

Fellowship and Success, was interrupted by the haughty, arrogant Temper of Castinus, who valuing himfelf upon the Success of his Arms, began to defpife Boniface, and claim a Precedency over him; but the other, who would by no means be perfuaded to acknowledge him for his Superior, embark'd his Forces, and fet Sail for Africk. This unfeasonable Arrogance in Castinus prov'd very prejudicial to the Emperor's Affairs; for the Vandals, who by their united Forces were reduc'd to the last Extremity, upon this Division took Courage, engag'd Castinus, defeated him, and kill'd near twenty thousand of the Romans.

II.

and

ace,

anane

Was

of

N.to Wer

Bi-

IC-

111

0-

ter

mach

ars

W

AT.

ent

der

ho

th-

ol-

11 ghi

er:

Py

ich

pe-

ey

WO

In-

ral

ty

ce el-

Honorius receiv'd the News of this Defeat with feated. much Concern, but did not live to punish his Generals, who by their untimely Disputes occasion'd From the time of Constantinus his Death, Honorins had entertain'd his Sifter Placidia with much Friendship and Affection, and the Communication was fo close between 'em, that it gave ground to several scandalous Reflections, as if their mutual Love was more than what ought to pass between a Brother and Sister. But this Year some unfortunate Differences fell out betwixt 'em, and were improv'd to that degree, that Placidia with her two Children, Valentinian and Honoria, retir'd into the East, where she was kindly received by her Nephew Theodofins, tho' he had formerly refus'd to own Constantius, her Husband, for Emperor. Honorius was made to believe, by some about him, that his Sifter held fecret Correspondence with the Goths, who still look'd upon her as their Queen, that she betray'd all his Councils to 'em, and invited his Enemies into the Empire; whether this was the reason of his Dislike, or any other Provocation he had received, he contracted so great an Aversion to her, that he readily gave her leave to depart, but

X 4

The Romans de-

> A. D. 423.

fell

Ch

obso

rius

him

Calt

desi

mac

of (

ftag

mac

His

he

wit

he

had

Em

his

and

WOI

WOI

had

Dea

had

by

in .

Fol

Int

fou

De

mu

into dos

Wit

ver

Æ

fall

ma

Honorius dies.

His Cha-

fell fick presently after, and dy'd of a Dropfie on the fifteenth of August, after he had lived thirty nine Years, of which he reign'd two with his Father, and twenty eight Years and feven Months after his Decease. The Historians of those Times vary very much in the Character they have left us of him; for they who writ of the Byzantine Empire are very severe to his Memory, whereas those who were his Cotemporaries highly commend him for his Zeal and Perseverance in the Orthodox Faith, to which they attribute his Success against the Barbarians and Usurpers. He seldem or never appear'd himself at the Head of his Armies. but executed all by his Officers, by whom he may be faid to have extinguish'd more Rebellions than any Christian Emperor whatsoever. They must all allow his Reign to have been very unfortunate. for in his Time Rome was first taken by the Goth; the Hunns invaded Pannonia; the Alans, Suevi, and Vandals broke into Spain; the Burgundians settl'd in Gaul, where the Goths also fix'd themselves at So many Enemies, with which the Empire was on all fides affaulted, requir'd a Prince of more Activity upon the Throne than Honorius, who is accus'd by some of so supine a Negligence and invincible Stupidity, that when he first wastold Rome was taken, he answer'd the Messengers, 'Twas very strange, for he but that Moment had been playing with it; supposing they meant a Game-Cock callid Rome, in which he took great Delight.

A. D. 423.

II. Honorius left no Children behind him, nor design'd any for his Successor at his Death. Placidia was absent with her Son Valentinian in the Court of Theodosius, so that the Imperial Purple seem'd to belong of Right to him who first laid hold upon it. This encouraged one John, who from an

John Usurps.

Op-

I.

ie

d

th

en

le

ve

n-

e-

n-

r-

s

m

S,

y

an

ılt

e, nd

ď

áð

Ed

re

18

ne

"

ig id

List.

111

OF

ne

de

an b-

obscure Beginning was first made Secretary to Honorins, and afterwards Prafectus Pratorio, to take upon him the Imperial Title, being incourag'd in it by Castinus, who was now return'd out of Spain, and defign'd Conful for the Year following, whom he made General of his Armies, and Etius, the Son of Gaudentius, a Scythian, who had been an Hostage with Alarich and the Hunns, and was now made great Master of the Palace by the Usurper. His first Care was to remove all those Magistrates. he had reason to suspect, and supply their Places with others that were more affectionate to his Cause; he depriv'd the Church of several Privileges it had obtain'd from the Grace and Favour of former Emperors, and fent an Army into Africk to fecure his Interest, and let up his Authority in those Parts, and then dispatch'd away his Ambassadors, as he would have 'em call'd, to Theodosius, to defire he would own and declare him Emperor. Theodosius had before this receiv'd the News of his Uncle's Death, but thought not fit to discover it 'till he had secur'd the Borders of the Eastern Empire, by a fufficient number of Troops placed at Solona in Dalmatia; and tho' he had been inform'd of John's Usurpation, he thought him a Man of no Interest, and did not much regard it; but when he found he had the Arrogance to fend and make his Demands of him, he receiv'd the Messengers with much Indignation, and fent em back with a very unwelcome Answer, or, as some say, banish'd 'em John, no way discourag'd at Theointo Propontis. dossus his Displeasure, sent Etius into Pannonia with a great Sum of Gold to draw the Hunns over to his Affistance, with whose Commanders Etius was intimate, who was farther order'd to fall upon the Rear of Theodosius his Troops if they march'd into Italy, whilft he himself charg'd 'em in

inc

of

ha

qu M

T

A

fan

Ca

rec

his bec

noi

pir

the

her

Ci

to

his thi

OW

the

we

his

Co

go!

fa

def

tur

20

his

Bo

incident

John taken

Prisoner.

in the Front. In the mean time Valentinian being declar'd Cafar by Theodofius, who had conferr'd the Dignity of Augusta on his Mother Placidia, was are riv'd at Salone, attended by Ardaburius, who was made General of the War, and his Son Afpar, where it was refolv'd between 'em, that Ardaburius with part of the Forces should go by Sea and befrege John in Ravenna, and that Aspar, with the rest of the Army, should convoy Placidia and Valentini. an by Land thither. Hereupon the General fet to Sea with a good Fleet, and was got just upon the Coasts of Ravenna, where he was going to land his Men, when a violent Storm arose that scatter d his Fleet, and drove his own Veffel a-shoar, where he was taken by the Usurper's Soldiers, and carry'd into his Prefence. John, who was highly elevated with a Victory that cost him nothing, and a Purchase he never dream'd of, knew Ardaburius to be a Man of fuch Consequence, that he hop'd Theodoffits would for his fake condescend to his own Terms. and admit him for his Companion in the Empire; for which reason he treated him very honourably, and allow'd him the Liberty of the City, which he made his Prison. Ardaburius made good use of this Favour from the Usurper; some he found at Ravenna, who having been disoblig'd by him, were grown disaffected to his Government, with whom he took Care to ingratiate himself; and observing the Negligence and Security in which the Tyrant liv'd, he fent Intelligence of it to his Son Alpan, who was by this time got to Aquileia, which he furpriz'd and fortify'd; his Father advis'd him to advance speedily with his best Troops and feize on the City Gates, which stood open and unguarded; this Advice Afpar executed with that Success, that after a little Opposition he took John, and sent him away to Placidia, who us'd him with an Infolence

Chap. IV. XLIX. The II. Valentinian III. 315

Sai

the

ar

was

ere

ith

ege

of

mi-

to

the

his

his

Was

nto

ith

afe

fan

files

ms,

re;

ly,

ich

of

at ere

om

ing

ant

Ar,

he

to

ize

d;

nat

m

nce

ent

incident to the Weakness of her Sex; for having cut off his Right Hand, the fet him upon an Afs, and had him led in Derition through the Streets of Aquiless, after which he was Beheaded. He was a Man, according to Procopius, of a mild Difposition, and much Temperand Moderation in all his Affairs. Three Days after the had been taken Prisoner by Aspan, Atius arriv'd with an Army of fixty thoufand Hunns, between whom and Afpar began a very obstinate Fight, 'till being inform'd of John's Captivity he thought it advisable to make the best Terms he could for himself. Placidia promis d to receive him into Favour, upon Condition he fent his Hunns home into the Country, and continu'd Obedient for the future; this he perform'd very honourably, and was afterwards ferviceable to the Empire in a great many respects. After this Valentini- VALENTIan was declar'd Emperor, and Placidia Regent of NIAN. the Empire during ther Son's Minority. She began her Administration with venting her Fury upon the City of Ravenna, which she suffer'd the Soldiers to pillage, and after the had stripp'd Castinus of all his Employments, the fent him into Exile, and by this Severity forc'd him upon violent means for his own Safety and Support; so that inviting such of the Army to him as had been lately Disbanded, or were willing to follow his Fortunes, and espouse his Caufe, he in a little time found himself in a Condition to begin new Disturbances, and with a good Body of experienc'd resolute Soldiers invaded Africk, out of which he hop'd he should be able to drive his old Competitor Boniface, who notwithstanding maintain'd his Post so well that Castinus was defeated and taken Prisoner. This piece of Service Invades Aturn'd much to the Reputation of Boniface, and reviv'd is taken an old Grudge Etius had to him, who therefore by Prisoner. his curning Infinuations perfuaded Placidia that Boniface had preserv'd Africk for himself, rather

A. D. 426. Castinus

than

of

the poi

fol

ing

the

tw

bar

and

Ma

exe

vin

dos

vol

of i

ed,

had

gail

lo n

alty

ter'

the

App

tog

who

Rel

he c

Def

cidi

but

caul

in G

tage

Frie

him

been

than the Empire; that he watch'd an Opportunity to Revolt, and Establish an Independent Sovereignty in those Parts; that he held secret Correspondence with the King of the Vandals, having marry a one of that Prince's Relations; that the only way to prevent him was to Abdicate his Authority there, and recal him home. On the other fide he writ to Boniface, and in his Letters pretended a great Friendship for him, told him he had been secretly accused of High-Treafon; that therefore the Empress intended to recal him home, but he advis'd him by all means to confult his own Safety, for if once he came within the Power of the present Government, the Danger would be unavoidable. Tho' Boniface was well affur'd of his own Innocence and Integrity, yet taking Atins for a Man of Honour, and his faithful Friend, he refus'd to quit his Command, and began to put himfelf into a Posture of Defence. Placidia was convinc'd by his Disobedience to her Orders, that Ætius his Information was true, and therefore fent Mavortius, Galbio and Sinox with a good Army into Africk to reduce him, and treat him as an Enemy to the Roman Empire.

Boniface being inform'd of the Forces that were marching against him, shut himself up in Carthage, where he was refolv'd to stand the Shock, and held out against the Romans so long, 'till the three Generals disagreed among themselves, and Mavortius and Galbio were kill'd by the Practices of Sinox, whether at the Procurement of Boniface, or to fatisfie his own Ambition and Revenge, is not eafily to be determin'd; however he did not long furvive 'em, but was dispatch'd shortly after, and left Boniface a Victory without the loss of one Man on his fide. Placidia, hearing of the ill Successof her three Generals, grew the more enrag'd, and refolving to renew the War, and push it on with more Vigour, she rais'd fresh Forces, and made choice of Sigeswhites to command 'em; whilst Boniface in the mean time concluded himself unable alone to oppose the Strength of the Empire, and therefore refolv'd to draw others into his Quarrel, and so applying himself to Guntharius and Genserich, Kings of the Vandals in Spain, he agreed to divide Africk be- The Vantween 'em, and accordingly the two Brothers em- dals call'd bark'd with their Forces at the Straits of Gibralter, into Africk. and landed in Africk, where they made themselves Masters of the Country without any Resistance, executing that Vengeance upon the milerable Provincials, which their enormous Crimes had pull'd

Chap.IV.XLIX. The.II. Valentinian III. 317

y in

vith

hat

alm

him

and

im,

rea-

bim

his

r of

na-

his

for

re-

im-

on-

hat

ent

my

an

ere

ıge,

eld

ne-

1115 ox,

fa-

ily

ve

30-

on

ner

ng

11-

ce of

down upon their Heads. Whilst Italy stood amaz'd at so unexpected a Revolution, and already gave Africk for lost, several of Boniface his Friends in Rome were deeply afflicted, when they beheld his Valour, with which he had often defended the Empire, was now turn'd against it; and wonder'd how a Man, who had given fo many Instances of his Integrity, Honour and Loyalty, should, without any Provocation, be thus alter'd on a sudden, and contract a Friendship with the Enemies of his Country: They therefore made Application to Placidia, and obtain'd her Permission to go into Africk, and at Carthage met with Boniface, who, when they charg'd him with Treason and Rebellion, produc'd Ætins his Letters, by which he convinc'd em that he took up Arms in his own With these Letters they return'd to Placidia, who was sensible of £tius his Treachery, but conceal'd her Indignation for the present, because Atius was at the Head of a victorious Army in Gaul; where he had lately obtain'd many Advantages over the Franks. But to Boniface and his Friends she express'd her Resentments; she assur'd him by her Letters, that she detested the Injury had been practised against him, and that for the future

A. D. 428.

he

of

the

pof

fol

ing

the

two

bar

and

Ma

exe

VID

dos

vol

of 1

ed,

had gair

lo n

alty

ter'

the

App

tog who

Ret

he c

Def

cidi

but

caul

in G

tage

Frie

him

been

than the Empire; that he watch'd an Opportunity to Revolt, and Establish an Independent Sovereignty in those Parts; that he held secret Correspondence with the King of the Vandals, having marry d one of that Prince's Relations; that the only way to prevent him was to Abdicate his Authority there, and recal him home. On the other fide he writ to Boniface, and in his Letters pretended a great Friendship for him, told him he had been secretly accused of High-Treason; that therefore the Empress intended to recal him home, but he advis'd him by all means to confult his own Safety, for if once he came within the Power of the present Government, the Danger would be unavoidable. Tho' Boniface was well affur'd of his own Innocence and Integrity, yet taking Atims for a Man of Honour, and his faithful Friend, he refus'd to quit his Command, and began to put himfelf into a Posture of Defence. Placidia was convinc'd by his Disobedience to her Orders, that Etius his Information was true, and therefore lent Mavortius, Galbio and Sinox with a good Army into Africk to reduce him, and treat him as an Enemy to the Roman Empire.

Boniface being inform'd of the Forces that were marching against him, shut himself up in Carthage, where he was refolv'd to stand the Shock, and held out against the Romans so long, 'till the three Generals disagreed among themselves, and Mavortius and Galbio were kill'd by the Practices of Sinox, whether at the Procurement of Boniface, or to fatisfie his own Ambition and Revenge, is not eafily to be determin'd; however he did not long furvive 'em, but was dispatch'd shortly after, and left Boniface a Victory without the loss of one Man on his side. Placidia, hearing of the ill Successof her three Generals, grew the more enrag'd, and refolving to renew the War, and push it on with more Vigour, she rais'd fresh Forces, and made choice of Sigefunites to command 'em; whilst Boniface in the mean time concluded himself unable alone to oppose the Strength of the Empire, and therefore refolv'd to draw others into his Quarrel, and so applying himself to Guntharius and Genserich, Kings of the Vandals in Spain, he agreed to divide Africk be- The Vantween 'em, and accordingly the two Brothers em- dals call'd bark'd with their Forces at the Straits of Gibralter, into Africk. and landed in Africk, where they made themselves Masters of the Country without any Resistance, executing that Vengeance upon the miserable Provincials, which their enormous Crimes had pull'd down upon their Heads.

Chap.IV.XLIX.The.II.ValentinianIII. 317

y in

vith

bat

dim

bim

and

im,

rea-

bim

his

r of

na-

his

for

re-

im-

on-

hat

ent

my

an

ere

ige,

eld

ne-

1185 ox,

faily

ive

30-

on

ner

ng

Vice of

Whilft Italy stood amaz'd at so unexpected a Revolution, and already gave Africk for lost, several of Boniface his Friends in Rome were deeply afflicted, when they beheld his Valour, with which he had often defended the Empire, was now turn'd against it; and wonder'd how a Man, who had given fo many Instances of his Integrity, Honour and Loyalty, should, without any Provocation, be thus alter'd on a sudden, and contract a Friendship with the Enemies of his Country: They therefore made Application to Placidia, and obtain'd her Permillion to go into Africk, and at Carthage met with Boniface, who, when they charg'd him with Treason and Rebellion, produc'd Atius his Letters, by which he convinc'd em that he took up Arms in his own With these Letters they return'd to Pla-Detence. cidia, who was sensible of £tius his Treachery, but conceal'd her Indignation for the present, because Etius was at the Head of a victorious Army in Gaul; where he had lately obtain'd many Advantages over the Franks. But to Boniface and his Friends she express'd her Resentments; she assur'd him by her Letters, that she detested the Injury had been practised against him, and that for the future

A. D. 428.

be

he might be affur'd of her Favour and Protection She advis'd him to apply himself diligently to the Good and Safety of the Empire, and be as zealous in his Endeavours to remove the Vandals out of A. frick, as he had been to call em in. Boniface readily undertook it, but found upon trial that it's easie to receive a powerful Enemy into a Country, but very difficult and often impossible to drive 'em out on't. He first attempted to remove em by the Promile of an immense Sum of Mony; when he found 'em deaf to that, he represented to 'em the Strength and Power of the Roman Empire; told em it was to be fear'd Theodosius and Valentinian would unite their Arms, and send such puissant Forces against em, as they would find it impossible for em to resist : But Gunderich, for his Brother was lately dead, was not to be mov'd either by his Threats or Promifes. He is describ'd, by the Writers of those Times, as a warlike Prince, of a low Stature, but Ambitious, capable of great Designs, wary in Contrivance, and vigorous in Execution; a Man of few Words, but weighty Sense; very expert at sowing Divisions at mong those he desir'd to weaken, and watchful upon all Opportunities, which he always husbanded to the best Advantage. Boniface perceiving he was not to be mov'd by fair means join'd with Afpar, who was lately arriv'd with a gallant Army out of Italy, and gave him Battel; in which the Romans were beaten, and great Numbers of 'em taken Prifoners, among whom was Martian, who was afterwards Emperor.

A.D. Genserich, meeting nothing to oppose him after this 430. Victory in Mauritania, proceeded up into Namis The Van-dia, and the rest of Africk, destroying all the Coundals contry as he pass'd, and like an irresistible Flame dequerAfrick vouring all before him; whilst Boniface, who had not Forces sufficient to make head against him, re-

tir'd

tir'

tha

of 1

of 1

tha

dec

can

Bon

a g

De

pul

it u

for gre

the

the

Was

wh

To

exc

fore

moi

rou:

Ima

Hea

an 1

wit.

fter

prec

and

his

ty 1

ado

Plac

cha

Chap.IV.XLIX.The.II. Valentinian III. 319

tir'd into the fortify'd Towns with those Troops that were able to join him. There were but three of these Towns that were not exposed to the Fury of the Enemy, those were Carthage, Hippo, and Cirtha, all of 'em built upon the Sea, and well provided. Towards the latter end of the Year Genferich came with his Army and late down before Hippo; Boniface had just before thrown himself into it with a good Body of Men, and made a very courageous Defence: But the King being resolv'd to take it push'd on the Siege with great Vigour, and block'd it up both by Sea and Land. The Siege continu'd for fourteen Months together, and was manag'd with great Obstinacy on both Sides; but at length, after Hippo the Garrison had been quite spent with the Heat of taken. the Service, and despair'd of any Relief, the Place was deliver'd up to the Mercy of the Barbarians, who put all they found to the Sword, pillag'd the Town, and destroy'd every thing of Value in it, except St. Austin's Library, who dy'd a Month before the Town was taken.

After the Loss of this Town the Vandals grew more outrageous than ever, committing such barbarous Cruelties where-ever they mov'd as surpass'd Imagination.

ow.

the

ONS

A-

di-

fie

out

out

ro-

ind

gth

VAS

site

m,

Sut

not

les.

25

us,

and

but

s a2

ful

led

Was

ar,

of

ans

ri-

er-

his

mi-

un-

de-

nad

re-

ir'd

Theodosius had some time before sent Aspar at the Head of a very powerful Army, to assist Valentinian in Africk; he was now join'd by Boniface, and with the united Forces both of the Eastern and Western Empire endeavour'd to put an end to the Depredations of the victorious Barbarian; who sought and entirely deseated him, kill'd the very Flower of his Army, and sorc'd the rest to sly for their Safety up and down the Country. Aspar with much ado return'd to Constantinople, and Boniface upon Placidia's Invitation embark'd for Italy; where he challeng'd Etins, sought him, and overcame him, but

A. D.

433.

Cl

fhé

Th

10 fito

Inf

affa

mab

bot

ful,

wa:

he bef

mu

Pie

Té

his

tian

tha

he

hets

infe

nue

the

the

not

afte

Wor

rick

of i

tha

Soc

two

Div

of t

pub

Pri

but dy'd three Months after, and enjoin'd his Wife Pelagia upon his Death-Bed never to marry any . ther Man but Ætius: Who, after his Overthron was for some time asham'd to appear at Court, and therefore retir'd into Pannonia, where he became more familiar with the Hunns, and by degrees rais'd himself up to his former Reputation, being shortly after employ'd by Valentinian against the Burgan dians, who had pass'd their Bounds and invaded Gallia Belgica, wasting the Country with Fire and Sword, 'till Etius appear'd against 'em, and with his usual Courage and Success overthrew, and forc'd 'em to return home.

by a single Combat.

About this time a new War had like to have with Persia broken out between Persia and the Empire; for The concluded edosius observing the Persians crouded the Frontier of the Empire with great Numbers of Troops, feat Bocopius against 'em with a very strong Army. raranes finding himself too weak to give 'em Battel, propos'd to decide the Difference by a fingle Combat between two Champions chosen respectively out of each Party; and that that Side whose Champion was vanquish'd should pay Tribute to the other. Theodosius is said to have accepted of the Proposal, and made choice of Arcobinda or Arcovindus for his Champion, who overcame the Persian, and was rewarded with the Confulship the Year following; and a Peace was concluded betwixt the Romans and the Persians, which was to last for fifty Years.

A.D. 434.

Some time after this a private Misfortune much afflicted the Court at Ravenna, where Honoria, Sister to the Emperor Valentinian, had stolen a great She first fent to Attila, King of the Hunns, and offer'd to marry him if he approv'd of the Match; but receiving no Answer agreeable to her Wishes, she prostituted her self to the Lust of one Eugenius, Steward of her Houshold, with whom fhe

Chap W. XLIX The II. Valentinian III. 1321

the plotted against her Brother's Life and Dignity. The thing being discover of the was only fent away to Confidentinople, there to be centur'd as Theodoffus Office required him, heldly affected in this block

Vife

and

ame ais'd

orthy

gun-Gal

and

with rc'd

have

The

tiers

fent

Vattel, om-

out

bion her.

ofal,

for

Was

ng; and

Sign

uch

Si-

reat

nns, the

her

one

om

the

Whill the Empire was thus afflicted by the cruel Infults of the Barbarians, the Church was no lefs affaulted by the Rife and Propagation of most dammable Herefies; it being observable, that Errors both in Doctrine and Discipline are never to fruitful as in times of publick Calamities. Neftorius Neftorius. was at this time Bishop of Constantinople; to which Bishop of he had been advanted by Theodoffus; having been Confiantibefore a Priest at Antioch, where he had gain'd much Reputation for his Eloquence, Doctrine and Piety: but was naturally of a haughty feditious Temper, as he made it appear to the World after his Promotion. Tho at first he prosecuted the Afinn and Novatian Hereticks with to much Zeal. that Constantinople was almost in an Uproar, yet he shortly after publish'd his own pernicious Tehets, which created much Trouble in the Church, infected great Multitudes of People, and continues at this Day in a great measure throughout the East. He held that it was not lawful to call his Herefie. the Virgin Mary the Mother of God, who could not be born; but the Mother of Josus Christ, who after his Birth obtain'd, by vertue of his good Works, to be united to the Word, not by an Hypostatick of Personal Union, but by a Residential Union of the Word in the Humanity, as in a Temple; fo that it was no more than a communicative or moral Society. By this Doctrine he did not only affert two Natures in Jesus Christ, but two Persons, the Divine and Human, and fo destroy'd the Mystery of the Incarnation. He did not at first venture to publish the Errors himself, but made Anastasins, a Priest he had brought with him from Antioch, broach

Ch

ptu

they

mak

her

fore

70h

of h

cil l

unit

who

ther

Pela

and

Cyri

Sent

shop

Pela

ther

and ther

Cor

Ho

his

the

plic

and dep

Col

fam

han

the

Pre

froi

Em

and

the

F

'em to the People, who were aftonish'd at his ble sphemous Impieties. Nesterius, instead of condem. ning fuch pernicious Doctrines, as the Duty of his Office requir'd him, boldly afferted and maintained 'em; openly denying to the Virgin Mary the Title of The Mother of God; and procur'd one Dorotheius, who had been lately depos'd from the See of Marcianople, to Anathematize from the Pulpit all those who presum'd to give her that Honour. These Errors, which Nestorius defended with much Obstinacy, caus'd Celestin Bishop of Rome, and Cyrill of Alexandria, to fummon a Synod each in his Diocess, where they were universally condemn'd, and Nestorius depos'd, if within ten Days after the Signification of that Act of their respective Synods he did not recant and disavow his Heresie; but he was so far from a Recantation, that by his Artifices he rais'd Divisions among the Orthodox Bishops them felves, and so far impos'd upon the Emperor The defins that he espous'd his Interest, and reprov'd 6 rill as one that by his Calumnies disturb'd the Unity of the Church. These Practices made the Breach wider, and the Schism irreparable, without the Intervention of a General Council, which therefore The General Council at Epheius.

The Third odosius summon'd to meet at Ephesus, where, instead of the Bishop of Rome, the Holy Scriptures were plac'd in an eminent Throne, as a Guide to their future Controversies; as appears from the first Act of the Council, and Cyrill's Apology to Theodofins. Nestorius was cited to appear at the first Session, and upon his Non-Appearance depos'd; the Sentence of his Deposition, fign'd by above two hundred Bishops, was fent to him, and publish'd in the City to the great Joy and Satisfaction of the People And the Day following St. Cyrill in a Sermon gave the Virgin Mary such Elogies, which the they were drawn from the concurring Sense of the Scriptures,

Chap. IV. XLIX. The. H. Valentinian III. 323

they at present throw upon her, yet did they make the Church from that time forward honour her with a greater Zeal than it had ever done before.

ntd ide

all

refe

Db.

will

Di-

and

Sig-

he was 日日まらい ach

ter.

be.

ead

ere

ieir

AA

ins.

and

to.s

Bi-

ity

ple.

ave

ney

CIL

res,

Five Days after the Condemnation of Nestorius, John, Bishop of Antioch, arriv'd at Ephesus with those of his Party, and being offended at what the Council had done without his Presence and Consent, he united himself with about thirty others, some of whom had been depos'd for their Crimes, and others were known openly to espouse the Errors of Pelagina. These Prelates assembled at his Lodgings, and calling themselves a Synod or Council, depos'd Grill, and Memnon of Ephesus, and pronounc'd a Sentence of Excommunication against all the Bishops of the lawful Council, unless they restor'd the Pelagians who had been depos'd; and declar'd with them, that Adam's Soul did not die for his Offence, and that Original Sin was not transmitted from Father to Son. The Emperor at the beginning of the Council had appointed Candidian, Master of his Houshold, to appear there on his Behalf, and by his Authority to prevent any Diforders, whereby the Fathers might be molested. Candidian had implicitly espous'd the Passion and Interest of Nestorius, and therefore intercepted the Couriers that had been deputed to Theodosius with the Proceedings of the Council, and Letters from the Fathers, and at the lame time inform'd the Emperor that Matters were handled with much Heat in the Assembly, and that they had proceeded against Nestorius with too much Precipitation: But he permitted the Anti-Council from time to time to transmit their Decrees to the Emperor; to accuse Cyrill and others of Heresie, and the Spirit of Revenge; and condemn every thing the Fathers had done: Whose Silence in the Matter the the Emperor interpreted as a Confession of the Fact and so gave Orders for the Imprisonment of St. C. rill and Memnon; who were not releas'd 'till the Emperor some time after had been inform'd of the Truth in each particular; and then he dissolv'd the Council, fet the two Bishops at liberty, and confirmed the Condemnation of Nestorius. But whereas the Fathers had proceeded to depose John and his Adherents, the Emperor thought fit to suspend the Ratification, for fear of exasperating those turbulent Spirits, and making 'em more averse to an Union: which they were fo far from embracing, that they protested they had rather die a thousand times than partake of Cyrill's Communion, or his Doctrine. As for Nestorius, the Emperor permitted him to retire to his Monastery, that he might have the better Opportunity to acknowledge his Errors, and abjute em: But he was fo far from acknowledging this Grace of Theodosius towards him, that he persisted to poison the World with his Herefie, both in his Discourses and his Writings; for which reason be was banish'd four Years after into Oasis, where alter his Tongue had been eaten out with Worms, he dy'd a miserable Death; but in his Life-time raise a spiritual War against the Church, which has been continu'd to this very Day.

The Wars all this while were continu'd in Gast and Africk with various Success, the Burgundiens had for some Years been opposing the Roman Arms, and put the Empire to a vast Expence; nothing but the Conduct and Resolution of such a General as Atins was able to hinder 'em from breaking farther into the Empire, and involving the State in new Difficulties. This Year he obtain'd so many Advantages over 'em, that Gundicarius their King was

A. D. vantages over em, that Gundicarius their King was 435. forc'd to listen to Reason, and agree to a Peace very in Gaul and honourable and advantageous to the Romans. At Africk.

the cee

Cl

Joy was

ly

for fon

ftar looi aba

and little

Got mai

the and wit

who that

her

from to A hit Go

and

the same time Trigetius, who had been sent to succeed Boniface in Africk, forc'd Genserich, King of the Vandals, to condescend to a Peace, upon Condition the Romans relign'd up to him that Part of Africk that lyes round Hippo, which was accordingly deliver'd up to 'em, and prov'd in Confequence highly prejudicial to the Empire. Joy the People conceiv'd at these two Agreements was improv'd at Rome, where Valentinian celebrated his Decennalia, and publick Vows were made for the Continuance of his Reign, which were reafonably thought to have more of Form than Substance in 'em, he behaving himself already like a loofe, diffolute Prince, regardless of the State, and abandon'd to his Pleafures.

reas

the

lent

ON;

hey

han As tire

eter

ure

有意言具有審定官

33

4 uc

25

d-ras Ty At

he

Peace being thus concluded between the Vandals and Burgundians, the Empire seem'd to breath a little after the long Fatigues of War, and to put on a Face of Gaiety; for the Theodorick, King of the Goths, had, contrary to his Agreement with the Romans, broken out lately in Gaul, yet Littorius, with a Body of Hunns, watch'd him so narrowly that the Milchief he did at present was inconsiderable, and his Attempts carry'd more of the Name of War with 'em than the Inconveniences of it, fo that Valentinian had time to listen to the Advice of those who perfuaded him to Marry Endoxia, and for that purpose demanded her by his Ambassadors of her Father Theodosius, who inclin'd willingly to the Proposal, and Valentinian himself went to fetch her from Constantinople, but was hardly return'd back to Ravenna before new Commotions interrupted the Solemnity of his Nuptials. For Littorius, who had hitherto commanded with much Success against the Goths, prefum'd too much upon his good Fortune, New Tronand out of Emulation to Etius was so far transported bles in as to Besiege Tholonse, the Capital of the Goths, Gaul.

promising to himself, if he could once be Master of that Place, he should be able with ease to drive the Goths out of the Country. Theodorick was at first so much frighten'd, that he sent some Bishops out to him with Offers of a Peace; but he truffing to the Promises and Encouragement he received from his Pagan Idols, would liften to no Terms of Accommodation, but gave the Goths Battel, who fighting like Men in Despair, not only defeated his Army, and kill'd a great many of his Men, but took him Prisoner, and led him bound into that Citylas a Slave, where he not long before threaten'd to enter as a Conqueror, and where, by Theodorick's Command, he was put to an ignominious Death. The Goths after this Defeat ravag'd up and down the Country without Control, and Theodorick advanc'd with his Army as far as the Rhône, thinking he now had an Opportunity to enlarge his Dominions. But Valentinian, as foon as he was inform'd of the Loss both of his General and his Army, dispatch'd Atius with all Expedition into Gaul, whose very Name was grown so terrible to the Goths, that without daring to appear in the Field against him they earnestly desir'd a Peace, which was granted 'em upon the Mediation of Avitus, Prafectus Pratorio of those Parts, and kept the Goths in tolerable good Order for some Years after.

A.D. But whilst £tius was employ'd in the quench439. ing the Fame in Gaul, a greater broke out in AAnew War frick, which prov'd of more weighty Consequence

Peace with the Romans about four Years before, thought himself oblig'd to observe it no longer than it appear'd advantageous to his Interest, and serv'd to strengthen and confirm his Pretensions in Africk; so that not content with the Conquest he had already made, nor the vast Provinces that were

n

in

late

nat

Car

fon

En

Ci

and

to

Te

hir

fro

Sic

he

mo

cis

CI

T

th

be

pa

on

fo

ole

ce

a-1

er

ba

TI

bi

fe

C

b fu

d

0 after

rive

as at hops

uff.

eiv'd

is of

who

his

took

ylas

en-

ick's

ath.

owo

31-11-

Do-

în-

Ai-

to

the

ce,

the

ch-

1-

ce

la

re,

an

d

1-

he

re n

in his Possession, he broke the Peace to which he had lately fworn, and after having rag'd with all imaginable Liberty throughout the Country, he fet upon Carthage, which he well knew was weakly Garrifon'd, and took it on the 20th of Ottober, before the Emperor could be inform'd of the Danger the City was in. He threw the Senators into Chains, and commanded the Inhabitants, upon Pain of Death, to discover to him all their Gold, their Silver, Jewels, and most valuable Moveables, and so made himself Master of the Riches of that wealthy City; from thence he pass'd with a powerful Fleet into Sicily, where, meeting with little or no Resistance, he behav'd himself with his usual Barbarity. Among his many other Severities, which he exercis'd without any Remorfe upon the Orthodox Clergy, this was one which carry'd not the least, Terror with it. He forc'd Quod-Vult-Deus, Biv. shop of Carthage, and a great part of his Clergy to be put naked on Board several leaky Vessels prepar'd for that purpose, and in that helpless Condition to be thrust out to Sea, where, after they had for a long time been tofs'd up and down by the violence of the Waves, to their great Consternation, and certain hazard of their Lives, they were all driven fafe a-shoar near Naples in Campania. He left Sicily sooner than he intended, upon an Information that Sebastian, Son of the late General Boniface, was arriv'd in Africk with a very strong Army; this brought him back with all speed to Carthage, for fear the Romans should in his Absence recover that City out of his Hands. But Sebastian, instead of behaving himself like a Roman General, and purfuing Genserich as an Enemy to the Empire, fate down idly in the Province, and enter'd into Terms of Accommodation with him. Hereupon Genserich, who defir'd to bind him firmer to his Inte-

Ch

Em

fons

the

into

Kin

ther

all (

wit

By (

719477

of f

Em

of f

in t

his

Arr

Ma

Blee

cefs

firf

cee

gan

ine

fuir

bet the

tim

feiz

nop

lyri

ble

not

eve Go

7

rest, endeavour'd by his Persuasions to make him turn Arian, which when he could by no means be prevail'd upon to do, he procur'd him to be murder'd, either out of an Aversion he had to the Or thodox Faith, or because he knew Sebastian was an experienc'd Commander, and was afraid he intended to circumvent him. This infolent Demeanour in the King of the Vandals highly provoked The dosius, who thought it time to provide against for prevailing an Enemy, and therefore Mann'd out Fleet of fixty Sail, on Board of which he orderd a good Army to embark, and committed it to the Conduct of Arcobindas, and two others, who were Commission'd to land in Africk, and by all possible means endeavour to drive Genserich out of it. These Generals instead of following their Orders wasted much of their time in Sicily, and ther croffing over into Africk, carry'd more Terror than Execution along with 'em; for without performing any thing of Moment they return'd back into Sicily. However their Expedition had this good Effect, that Genserich perceiving what Power The odosius had, which at another time might be better manag'd, he fent his Ambassadors to Constantinopla to treat about a Peace, which Theodofius was forc'd to conclude the Year following, for Reasons that made that Year famous to Posterity.

A. D.

442. The Hunns Empire.

The Hunns, who had formerly driven the Alans, Goths and Vandals out of their ancient Seats, and forc'd 'em to pass over the Rhine and Ister into the Invade the Roman Territories, began now to follow 'em; and taking the Advantage of the Wars in which the Remans were engag'd with their Neighbours, especially the Vandals in Africk, muster'd all the Forcesthey could raife among the Inhabitants on the other fide, the Euxine, and with an Army, terribly prodigious for its Numbers, fell upon the Frontiers of the

Chap.IV.XLIX. The.II. Valentinian III. 329

Empire, where they seiz'd on the Forts and Garrisons built formerly upon the Banks of the Ister for the Desence of it. Here the Army was divided into two Bodies, with one of which Attila their King invaded Mysia, and with the other his Brother Bloda fell upon Thrace, where, bearing down all Opposition before 'em, they rag'd in all Places with Fire and Sword, they took and surpriz'd many Cities, and among the rest Naissus and Singidunum, two Cities of Myfia Prima.

be

n

ur

ığ.

fo

to

H

4

川川

d

.

d

.

d

Are.

10

Theodofins was too fenfible of the ill Confequence of fuch Irruptions, especially at a time when the Empire was fo much weaken'd already, not to think of some timely Refistance, and stop em, if possible, in their first Motions; whereupon he sent two of his Generals, Arnegistus and Foannes, with a strong Army against 'em. Arnogistus engag'd Attila near Marcianople, at the fame time that Joannes fought Bleda in Thrace; and they both met with such Success that the Barbarians were worsted, and feem'd at first more defirous of returning than capable of proceeding forward; but the Fate of the Empire began now to press hard upon it, and its Ruin seem'd inevitable; for the two Generals, instead of purfuing the publick Interest, fell into private Quarrels between themselves, in which Joannes was kill'd by the Fraud of his jealous Antagonist.

The Hunns taking the Advantage of these untimely Dissentions pursu'd their Conquests, and seiz'd upon all the Cities in Thrace, except Adrianople; they enter'd into Macedonia, Greece and Illyricum, in all which Places they did such horrible Mischiess as they never selt before. Being not only sworn Enemies to Christianity, but even to Civility, and the Knowledge of the true God; they exceeded the Goths and Vandals in their barbarous Cruelties, and when ever the Romans had

the

d

R

h

fe

P

fi

ar

fa

re

hi

th

u

go

in

ty

W

fr

gi

th

Of

M

th

th

tii

th

T

fe

qu

N

er

B

E

fe

th

st

the Courage to face 'em, they feem'd rather to harden and provoke, than repel and diftres em. This reduc'd Theodosius to the last extremity, and tho' he had formerly resolv'd never to let Genserich possess a Foot in Africk, but by main Force to drive him out, yet being now pres'd by a nearer Calamity, and unable to contend with two Ene-

dals.

Peace with mies at once, he was perfuaded to liften to the Overtures made by the Vandals, and granted 'em better Terms than they could otherwise have defir'd or expected. For Genserich's Affairs at home were in great Confusion; his insufferable Infolence, which he had contracted from the long Course of his Success, had so incens'd his Subjects, that they conspir'd against him, and when his Vigilance had discover'd and prevented the Plot, he us'd both the Innocent and Guilty with so much bloody Severity, that he could not have been more weaken'd by a Defeat in Battel. These Domestick Difasters made him follicit a Peace both at Constantinople and Ravenna, which Valentinian and Theodosius, for the Reasons above-mention'd, readily The Emperors, more for State than any granted. other Consideration, referv'd some ruin'd Provinces to themselves, and left the Vandals the quiet Possession of the rest of Africk, upon Condition he paid a Tribute to the Emperor for three Years together, and deliver'd his Son Honoric up to Valentinian as a Pledge and Assurance of his Faith, which he had so often violated,

> III. The Peace being concluded, Theodasius recall'd his Army out of Sicily, to be employ'd under the Conduct of Areobindas and Aspar against the Hunns, who were now got so far into the Country that all Opposition seem'd to come too late; so that Theodosius was forc'd, to the great Prejudice of his Repu-

Chap.IV.XLIX. The.II. Valentinian III. 331

em.

and

rich

to ne-

the

cm

de-

me

lo-

ong

as,

Vi-

he

uch

ore

ick

160-ily

iny

inuet

ion

ars

Va-

th,

re-

der

he

try

hat

his

u-

Reputation, to try the Power of his Gold, when he found the Force of his Steel ineffectual. He A.D. fent his Ambassadors to Attila to treat about a Peace, which he offer'd to purchase at the Price of Theodosifix thousand Pounds of Gold to be paid in Hand, us buys a and an Annual Pension of five hundred, or as some Peace of the Hunns. fay, a thousand more, provided he would instantly retreat, and confine himself and his Subjects within his own Bounds. The Proposals feem'd so fair that Attila found no reason to reject 'em, so that upon Payment of the Mony he prepard to be gone, enrich'd not only with so vast a Sum, but infinite other Treasure, and an hundred and twenty thousand Captives, leaving Illyricum in a much worse Condition than ever it had felt before, tho frequently subject to such Calamities; as an Aggravation to which, so dreadful a Snow fell this Year, and lay so long on the barren Ground, which the Barbarians had burnt up and wasted, that not only great quantities of Cattle, but multitudes of Men, Women and Children perish'd for want of the Conveniences of Habitations and Fuel, of which the Savage Hunns had depriv'd 'em; at the same time happen'd an Earthquake at Rome, which overthrew feveral Buildings both publick and private. These Accidents were look'd on as prodigious, and feem'd to forerun that mighty Storm, which, tho' quell'd for the present, broke in shortly after, and like an Hurricane tore up both the Eastern and Western Provinces.

In this Interval Theodosius, as if he foresaw the ensuing Calamities, reinforc'd and fortify'd the Borders, and by several Acts of State and publick Edicts put himself into the best Condition of Defence his Affairs would admit of; for at present the Empire enjoy'd a Tranquility both in the Eastern and Western Provinces, greater than any it

hac

his

was tir'

in t

Im

Bu

cau

Th

the

ow

Eπ

her

tha

figi

eve

to

hin

Co

per ria

the

doc

The

her

do

like

ver

a P

W

tia

Di

fer

Sp

Th

an

W

had known for a long time before; it look'd like a Calm presaging the Tempest that was to follow. for except some Motions of the Burgundians in Ganl, who were easily reduc'd by Etins, we hear of nothing that diffurb'd the publick Peace, 'till it was broken again by Attila. However Theodofius met with some Disturbances in his private Family. that gave him as much trouble almost as a War would have done; his Sifter Pulcheria had hitherto affifted him at the Helm of State, and by her Care, Vigilance and Sagacity eas'd the Burden of the Empire, that would otherwise have Jain heavy upon his Shoulder, Chrysaphius the Eunuch, and great Favourite of the Emperor, was highly displeased with Flavianus, Patriarch of Constantinople, and very defirous to have him remov'd, but knew all his Attempts would be ineffectual whilst Pulcheria continu'd in Power, whom therefore he labour'd to involve in some Difficulties; accordingly he endeavour'd to raise a Jealousie and Emulation between her and the Empress Endocia, whom he persuaded to remove from Pulcheria the Steward of her Houshold, who manag'd all her Concerns; this Eudocia try'd all means with her Husband to effect, but Theodosius was resolv'd against it, nor would he fo far disoblige his Sister, to whose pru-Pulcheria dent Management he was so much indebted. But at length she prevail'd so far that the Emperor requir'd Flavianus to make her a Deaconess; for as they often in those Parts drew great Men by force to Bishopricks, so the Bishops themselves very often made choice of Ladies of more exalted Virtue and Honour than the rest of their Sex, and by force ordain'd 'em Deaconesses of the Church, Flavianus knew not how to disobey the Emperor's Order, but admonish'd Pulcheria of it, and advis'd her to avoid him, left he should be forc'd against remov'd from Court.

Chap.IV.XLIX. The II. Valentinian III. 333

H.

2 2

in

ear

lit

us

ly, ar

to

re,

he

peat

d

10-

nis

n-

n-

2-

en

d

er

is

f-

10

1-

ut

e-

25

ce

f

lê

y h.

S

d

st is his Will upon a very ungrateful Office. Pulcheria was no foomer inform d of it, but the voluntarily retir'd from the Administration, and led a private Life in the Country. From this we may form a lively Image of Court Intrigues, where it's very often the Bulinels of one Courtier to Supplant another, because he thinks he is in a better Post than himself. They who are defirous to absolve Endocia from the Sin of Ingratitude to Pulcheria, to whom the ow'd her Greatness, give another Reason for the Emperor's Displeasure, and affirm Pulcheria ow'd her Disgrace to none but her felf. They tell us, that upon Observation of the Emperor's Eafiness in figning whatever Papers were offer'd him, without ever examining the Contents of 'em, she thought to convince him of his Folly, by reprefenting to him how dangerous it might one Day prove in the Confequence; the one Day prefented him with a Paper in which he fold his Wife as a Slave to Pulcheria, which he fign'd, as usual, without ever reading the Substance of it: Sometimeafter she detain'd Exdocia as the came to visit her, and when the Emperor himself came to demand her, she rold him that she having bought her of him he had no Right in her, and thereupon produc'd the Contract. dosius was fo distasted at this home Reproof, that, like other Princes who are fond of Flattery but averse to Reprehension, he ever after that entertain'd a Prejudice to her, which it's more than probable his Wife took care to aggravate, the better to re-ingratiate her felf with him; for the had lately been in Difgrace, and that upon an Occasion which may ferve to show us how cautious Persons in an high Some Person had presented Sphere ought to move. Theodofins with a Fruit, admircable for its Largeness and Beauty; this he fent as a Rarity to Eudocia, who made a Present of it to Paulinus, with whom fhe

ru

an

an ag

rec

a۱

gr

pa

CH

op

eip

of

do

fet

be

fel

'en

the

to.

ob

upo

Itu.

the

tini

fuf

Val

wh

run

the

onl

wh

of

ing

that

liv'

of his great Learning, that her Familiarity with him gave occasion to some scandalous Resections. He, ignorant from whence the Empress had received it, carry'd it to Theodosius as a thing new and singular, and Theodosius presently after ask'd his Wife what was become of it; she, for fear of displeasing him, answer'd she had eaten it, whereupon Theodosius producing the Fruit convicted her of Falshood, order'd Paulinus to be put to Death, and for some time was alienated in his Mind from the Empress.

Eudocia, the Empress, in Disgrace.

Pulcheria being remov'd from the Administration. Chry (aphius thought he might now with ease work Flavian's Ruin, and was shortly after presented with a fair Opportunity of effecting it. Eutyches, an Abbot of a Monastery in Constantinople, had very vigoroufly oppos'd Nestorius his Herefie, but as it often happens in the like Cases, fell out of one Extream into another: For whereas Nestorius deny'd the Hypostatick Union in Jesus Christ, Eutyches deny'd the Distinction of the two Natures, confounding the one in the other. This Doctrine was immediately condemn'd in a Synod at Constantinople, where Entyches was fummon'd to appear, but refus'd to stir out of his Monastery; tho' he presently after apply'd himself to Chrysaphius, whose Relation he was, and who was now the great Favourite of Theodofins. Chrysaphius persuaded the Emperor to summon the fecond Council of Ephesus, where by the Activity of Dioscorus, Bishop of Alexandria, the Eurychian Herefie was approv'd, and Flavian, by whose means it had been condemn'd in the Synod, was not only depos'd but most barbarously abus'd at Ephesius, and banish'd into Lydia, where he dy'd of his Wounds in a short time after, and is commemorated as one of the Martyrs of the Greek Church. This Violence and Injustice against Flavian demonstrates to us the Corruption

Chap.IV.XLIX. The II. Valentinian III. 335

ruption of the Bishops that compos'd that Council, and that the Ancients upon good Grounds call'd it an Assembly of Thieves.

10

m

e,

t,

r,

at

D,

0-

r-

ne

П.

rk

th

b-

0-

ch

m

y.

he

he

ly

ty-

ut

ď

nd

MS.

he

ty

an

ans

des

ban a

he

In-

or-

ion

Attila, who had hitherto observ'd the Peace concluded with the Empire, did now again declare War against Theodosius, because the Tribute he was to have receiv'd by the Articles of Peace had not been pundually paid him; and taking the Advantage of a great Frost, which had frozen up the Danube, he pass'd his Army over, and wasted Pannonia and Illyricum. Theodosius sent Anthemius and Arnegistus to oppose him, who did great Service to the Empire; especially Anthemius, who was afterwards Emperor of the West, finding the Barbarians dispers'd up and down the Country, and intent upon the Pillage, he fet upon 'em at several times, destroy'd a great number of them, and constrain'd the rest to unite themfelves into one Body near Sardica, where he gave 'em Battel; and tho' Arnegistus at the beginning of the Engagement abandon'd his Collegue and deferted to the Enemy, yet he got an entire Victory, and oblig'd 'em to fue for a Peace, which he granted upon Condition they hung up the Traitor Arnegistus, who accordingly fell a Sacrifice to Justice, and the Peace was ratify'd both by Theodosius and Valentinian. Some time after this the Western Empire Placidia fuffer'd a great Loss in the Death of Galla Placidia, dies. Valentinian's Mother, a Princess of great Prudence, who had been toss'd to and fro in the World, and run through several Changes of Fortune. She had the chief Management in the Affairs of State, not only during her Son's Minority, but afterwards when he arriv'd to a Ripeness of Years; for he was of himself an effeminate voluptuous Prince, religning himself up entirely to the Government of those that were near his Person: His Mother, whilst she liv'd, restrain'd him in a great measure by her Authority

A.D. 447-

thority and good Counfel; but as foon as the was dead the Depravity of his Nature appear'd visible

(

t

b

k

ti

a

h

fo

it

he

of

al

W

Fin

of

na

co

nu

m

'ti

Ei

be

W

to

had

fur

he

wh

fer

ftr

returns gain to

Court.

to the World, who thereby grew fentible how beneficial Placidia had been to the Empire. And as Valentinian was miss-led by Parafites and evil Cours fellors in the West, so was Theodosius abus'd by the Artifices of his Favourite Chrysaphins in the East. where he ful'd with an unlimited Authority, tyrannizing in a particular manner over the Clergy. Pulcheria His villanous Practices provoked Pulcheria to quit "her Solitude and return again to Court, where the made it appear to Theodosius, that Eutyches was in infamous Heretick; that Chrysaphins had supported him out of Malice to Flavian; and had abus'd his Bounty in many respects. Hereupon Theodofius turn'd him out of all his Employments, confifcated his Estate, and banish'd him. This was thought too mild a Proceeding against one, who had not only most shamefully abus'd the Favour of his Prince, but troubled the Repose of the Church, and horris bly perfecuted her faithful Pastors. Theodosius at the fame time severely reprov'd his Wife Endocia, for concurring with Chrysaphius in his Intrigues, and procuring a Difagreement between him and his Sister Pulcheria, reproaching her besides for her private Correspondence with Paulinus, and appear d fo displeas'd at her, that to avoid his Indignation she got leave to visit the Holy Places at Ferusalems where she led a very devout retir'd Life. this publick Justice done to the great Satisfaction of his Subjects, and a Defire to repair the Injuries done to the Church by the late Council at Ephelis, Theodosius dy'd on the twenty ninth of July at Constantinople, in the fiftieth Year of his Age, and forty third of his Reign. Historians are not agreed upon the manner of his Death; some say he dy'd of Sickness, and particularly of the Plague; others, that

Theodosius Dies.

Chap. IV. L. Valentinian III. Martian. 337

that he fell off from his Horse whill he was a Hunting, and dy'd the Night following.

25

an-

he

iff,

y-

y.

uit

he

an

red

his

n'd

E-

too

nly

ce, rri-

the

for

ind

his

711-

fo

fhe

mis

ter

ion

ries

BS;

on-

or-

eed

of

ers,

hat

He was a Prince exemplary for his Piety, and a His Chagreat Friend to the Church; but he was of a weak rafter. Spirit, and too much guided by those that were about him. Whilft he fuffer'd himself to be directed by his Sifter Pulcheria the Administration was blameless, which indeed redounded more to her Reputation than his own; but he lay too open to the Practices of intriguing Courtiers, who often perfuaded him to Actions unjust and unwarrantable. He was to far from revenging any Injury offer'd him, that it's faid of him he never was feen to be angry. As he refign'd the Civil Affairs up to the Government of his Sifter and chief Ministers, so did he manage all his Wars by his Generals, addicting himself wholly to his Devotions and Recreations. Theedefins dy'd in the seventh Consulate of Valentinian and of Avinus, in the 1202d Year of Rome, An. Dom.

Immediately upon the Death of Theodofins Pulche- A. D. ria got Martian to be declar'd Emperor by the Senate, to which the Othicers in the Army afterwards Martian. confented. She thought the readiest way to continue both him and her felf in the Authority was to marry him, which she did, but continu'd a Virgin 'till her Death notwithstanding, as we are told by Evagrius. Martian was by Birth a Thracian, and being the Son of a Soldier he always follow'd the Wars: It happen'd, as he was going in his Youth to lift himself at Philippopolis, he found a Man that had been lately kill'd lying upon the Road; being furpriz'd at the Sight, he deferr'd his Journey 'till he could conveniently bury the Corps: But some who came by, and observ'd the Action, preferr'd an Information against him to the Magistrates of Philippopolis, by whose Order he was ap-

pre-

Cl

bul

fen

tila

act

ted

ter

at I

fev

out

W

or I cho

En

Ho

ter

Suf

her

feri

wo

ftre

acc

to I

a ve

not

por

inte

lent

dor

his

he :

aga

dle

frai

us,

dy

prehended, indicted, and condemn'd for the Murder; but as they were ready to lead him out to Execution, the true Author of the Fact was discover'd and convicted, and Martian was left at liberty to follow his Inclinations, which led him to the Wars. Evagrius relates several Passages of him, which he faith portended the Imperial Dignity: Martian serving in Africk against the Vandals was taken Prisoner, as we observ'd before, with several others, in that Battel which Aspar lost to Genserich, and was order'd to be brought with the rest into a Field, where the King might have the Opportunity of viewing 'em, and where Martian was fall'n fast asleep before the King's Arrival, who coming at last to visit the Prisoners, observ'd an Eagle hovering over Martian whilst he slept, to protect him with her Wings from the Heat of the Sun, which in that Country, and at that Season of the Year, was very intense. Upon this Sight he conjectur'd what in the Course of Time was to befall him, and therefore upon a Promise given him, that when he came to be Emperor he would never wage War with the Vandals, he gave him his Liberty; which Promife he religiously observ'd after his Promotion.

a fevere Law against such Clerks and Monks as quitted the Orthodox Religion, and follow'd Eutyches his damnable Doctrine. He restor'd all those Bishops that had been depos'd by the Council at Ephesus, recall'd all that had been banish'd, and reestablish'd 'em in their several Diocesses; and the Martian Year following this Emperor fummon'd the Fourth General Council, which was to be celebrated at Nice, but by an Order from the Emperor was transferr'd to Chalcedon, where Dioscorus was depos'd, together with all those that had espous'd Eutyches

Three Days after his Establishment he publish'd and his Herefie.

[ummons the Fourth General Council.

IV. This

- Constitution of the second of E

to

CO-

er-

he

m,

y :

Vas

ral

ch.

3

ni-

l'n

ng

10-

im

ch

746 iat

-91

ne

he

ife

.

bes

1-

E-

e-

ne

h

at

f

d,

OS

is

IV. This Year Valentinian, or his Ministers, were busily employ'd in warlike Preparations, and the Defence of the Empire, which was threaten'd by Attila; who observing Valentinian to be a vitious unactive Prince, regardless of the Publick, and devoted to his fenfual Pleafures, thought it no difficult marter to possess himself of the Empire; especially having at present an Army on foot consisting of no less than feven hundred thousand Men, rais'd promiscuously out of Tartary, Poland, Germany, and Muscowy. The Writers of those Times have aim dat several Reasons, or rather Conjectures, for this War, and why Attila chose to begin in Gaul sooner than other Parts of the Empire adjoining nearer to him. Fornandes faith, that Honric, Son of Genserich, having marry'd the Daughter of Theodorich, King of the Goths in Gaul, upon some Suspicion that she had a Delign to posson him cut off her Nofe, and fent her home to her Father; that Genserich apprehending upon good grounds Theodorich would refent to barbarous an Injury, endeavour'd to strengthen himself by an Alliance with Attila, and accordingly fent great Prefents to him, defiring him to invade Theodorich, and promiting to join him with a very strong Army. Attila, who was intent upon nothing but his own Advantage, embrac'd the Opportunity; and that he might first divide those he intended to destroy, he sent his Ambassadors to Valentinian, conjuring him by no means to affilt Theo. dorich, and affuring him at the same time that all his Deligns were upon him: On the other hand, he made Theodorich believe all his Preparations were against the Romans, and advis'd him not to intermeddle in the Quarrel. These crafty Practices in the fraudulent King were discover'd by the noble Atius, who foreleeing what a mighty Storm was ready to discharge it self upon the Subjects of the Zi

tila

batt

gin

tor

fore

bro

Co

to I

Cha

and

who

pend

pref

Bati

pec

had

and

treb

mid

rick

man

he d

the

Was

tinu

neith

Inco

Reti

mad

his P

ing,

tage,

whig

and

Atti

Empire, prevail'd with Theodorick, and his Son Thorismond, to suspend for the present their particular Quarrels to the Empire, and by an Union with it oppose the furious Torrent, which seem'd to threaten Attila in- both alike. In the mean time Attila was marching vades Gaul. at the Head of his numerous Forces out of Scythia into Germany in the very midst of Winter, encouraging the People as he march'd along to throw off their Obedience to the Roman Empire, and joining with him have their Share in the Spoils of Gaul, and by this means rais'd fo powerful an Army, as feem'd defign'd not only for the Destruction of Gaul, but the whole Earth. When he was advanc'd as far as the Rhine, he built fo many Boats for the Transportation of his Forces that the vast Hercinian Forest feem'd unable to supply him with a sufficient quantity of Timber. Having pass the River, he took and pillag'd Cologn, Tongri, and Mets; from thence he pass'd on to Arras, which met with the like Treatment, for where-ever he came he put all to Fire and Sword, and so grew amazingly terrible to all Mankind: He order'd himself to be call'd The Scourge of God, and as fuch he behav'd himself, the Instrument of Divine Wrath, and a publick Plague to the rest of Mankind.

Ætinsbeing inform'd of the Barbarian's Progress, muster'd his Forces at Arles, as well those of the Empire, as the Confederates under Theodorich King of the Western Goths, Merovens of the Franks, Sangiban and Gundicarius Kings of the Alani and Burgundians, between whom at present Gaul was divided. Anian, Bishop of Orleance, hearing of Attila's Approach towards that City, went speedily to Ætins, to acquaint him with the dangerous Condition the City would be in without a timely Relief, and was fent back with the Promise of a speedy Succour by Ætins: He was hardly return'd before At-

tila

Chap.IV. L. Valentinian III. Martian. 341

b

20ar

it

en

g

n-

g-

ar

th

d'd

ut

25

1

A

111-ok

ce

ke

re

all

be

ne

UC

ſs,

he

ng

11-

19-

/j-

111

to

li-

ef,

C

lt-

la

tila laid Siege to the City with his whole Army, He lay battering it on every fide with his Warlike En- Orleance, gines; but here his Arms first met with a check, for Etims, Theodorick, and Thorismond arriving forc'd him to raise the Siege, tho' some say he and raises broke into the City, but upon the approach of the the Siege. Confederates was forc'd to retire, before he had time to pillage it, to the Campi Catalaunici, or Plains of Chalons, angry and enrag'd at his Disappointment, and there he resolv'd to provoke Etims to Fight, whom he had already conquer'd in Imagination, depending upon the Multitude of his Forces. Etius, who was as willing to engage as Attila, soon presented himself, and stood prepar'd for a bloody Battel; he was at first in a great suspence, and suspected the King of the Alans, who he was inform'd had an Intent to Defert the Romans in the Fight, and run over to Attila; having therefore made a treble Division of his Forces, he plac'd him in the midd; the Right Wing he committed to Theodorick and his Son Thorismond, the Left he commanded himself, and both in the Front and Rear he dispos'd the most Valiant of the Roman Legions, the better to oblige the rest to fight. The Fight Ætius enwas very obstinate and bloody on both sides, con- gages him, tinuing from Noon 'till Midnight; at which time neither Party yielded, but were rather parted by the Inconvenience of the Night; and Attila founding a Retreat retir'd behind a Rampart he had formerly made, and left Ætius Master of the Field, who posted his Men in the best manner he could 'till the Morning, left the Enemy should take any Advantage, and fnatch that Victory out of his Hands and beats which he began already to think himself secure of, him. and was the next Morning affur'd of his Success. Attile is faid to have lost in the Battel no less than one hundred and seventy thousand Men. On the

Z 3

Pre

WI

Co

Th

foo

er (

and

bai

for

ai

on

Wa

ly

fid

wł

lan

A

of

Va

en

of

Ste

ce

ter

lai

N

en

ot

A

gle ha

de

In

B

th

Romans fide Gundcarius, King of the Burgunds ans, and Theodorick was flain, at which his Son Therismend was so enrag'd, that he resolv'd instantly to attack Attila in his Camp, and revenge his Father's Death; but Ætius, who was fenfible of the Strength and aspiring Genius of the Goths, was afraid if the Hunns should be totally overthrown, that then they would turn their Forces against the Empire, and therefore in Policy chose to let him escape at present, that he might awe the Goths and Franks, and divert em from any dangerous Attempts upon the Empire; whereupon, after he had given Thorismond large Commendations for his extraordinary Valour, he advis'd him with speed to go and take Possession of his Father's Dominions both in Gaul and Spain, before his Neighbours had time to raise him any Disturbance there. Thorifmond approv'd of his Advice, and so deferr'd his Revenge to another Opportunity. This Proceeding of Etius towards Attila was very much blam'd by fome, and gave others an opportunity of reprefenting him as a dangerous Person to Valentinian, and one that had a Defign of making himself Emperor; to which end he held private Correspondence with Attila, whom he forbore to destroy, when he had him in his Power, and fuffer'd him to escape, to bring more Mischief upon the Empire. Suggestions, how ill so ever they were grounded, prov'd in time the Ruin both of Valentinian and Etius, as we shall see hereafter.

A. D. Attila having been beaten in Gaul retir'd with his 452. Troops into Pannonia, which was now become the Seat of the Hunns, Part of it being call'd from them Hungaria; here having refresh'd his Army, and reinforc'd it to that degree that it was far more numerous than the Year before, he resolv'd now to invade Italy it self, which was more plentiful than any of the

-010

ndf-

Son

ant-

his

of

Was

wn,

the

ıım

and

At-

had

ex-

to

ons

had

rif-

his

d-n'd

Te-

an,

mite

he

pe,

efe

d.

bn

. 411

nis

he

m

e-

e-

de

he

) =

Provinces, and where he thought he should meet with no Goths, Alans, Franks, or Burgundians, who in Confederacy with the Romans could oppose his Arms. The News of his Deligns and Preparations were no foonerknown in Italy, but the People were in a greater Consternation than at the Expeditions of Alarich and Radagaifus; for they confider'd Artila as a Barbarian, more herce and favage than either of the former, who profes'd himself delighted in Destruction, and rejoic'd at the Calamities he brought upon his Fellow-Creatures. At the fame time there was a Report of feveral new Prodigies, particularly of three great Stones that fell from Heav'n; befides Italy had been lately afflicted by a great Dearth, which was attended by a grievous Peltilence, Calamities terrible enough in themselves, without the Aggravation of any other Mischiefs.

Attila having pass'd the Danube towards the end Attila inof Winter, and repuls'd the Garrisons plac'd by vades Italy. Valentinian for the Defence of the Julian Alas, enter'd into Friuli and Istria; and the Inhabitants of Venetia, who expected the first Violence of the Storm, betook themselves to the Islands and inaccessible Marshes of the Adriatick, upon the first terrible Noise of Attila's Preparations; here they laid the Foundations of the City, call'd from the Foundation of Venice. Name of the Country, Venice, which exceedingly encreas'd by the Destruction of Aquileia, and the other Neighbouring Cities which felt the Fury of Attila's Arms, and is at prefent one of the most glorious Common-wealths in Christendom, or perhaps in the World. Valentinian had fortify'd Aquileia, the Metropolis of Venetia, a strong Town, delign'd to protect the Borders of Italy from the Incursions of the Barbarians. This Place Attila Attila Be-Belieg'd, and batter'd it furiously for the space of seges Athree Months together; but the Besieg'd defended quileia-

The first

Z 4 them-

the

Wa

M

pa

ty

A

the

de

fit

(e)

ad

ft:

on

H

ta

of

th

E

bo

themselves with so much Bravery, that the Barbarians were ready to Mutiny, and murmur'd at the King for spending his Time, and the Strength of his Army in a Siege, where they got nothing but Blows to encourage them; whereupon Artila had thoughts of raising it, but was prevented by an Omen, which gave him fresh Encouragement; for he obsery'd a Stork, that had built her Nest' upon the top of a great Tower in the City, to take her young ones and fly with 'em far off into the Country. This he show'd to his Army, and told 'em what the Stork did was by Instinct, and a natural Foresight, that she could expect no more Safety in a City that was going to be taken by a Victorious Enemy; he advis'd 'em therefore mer to be wanting to themselves, but pariently expect the Possession of what was due to their unwearyd Labours. This Speech so inflam'd his Men that they once more apply'd their Engines to the Walls, and after a very vigorous Affault took the City tho' fome fay it had been first deserted by the Inhabitants, who taking the Advantage of a dark Night escap'd by Sea with their Bishop Niceras. The better to amuse the Enemy, and gain time for their Retreat, they plac'd certain Wooden Statues upon the Walls, which were to pass upon the Barbarians for Soldiers put there to guard 'em: The Hums were not sensible of the Stratagem 'till they observ'd several Birds to perch unmolested upon em, and then they scal'd the Town, took it without any Relistance, pillag'd it for several Days together, kill'd all the Men that had been left behind, and ravish'd the Women, designing by this batharous piece of Severity to firike an Awe into the rest, and terrifie em into Submission. This made the Inhabitants of the Neighbouring Cities quit their Dwellings, by which means all the Towns there-and takes

10

36

ıt.

d

n

16

U,

O

0

d

rk

.

at II

ıt

.

-

k

T

25

-

C

a

-

1 ė

e

t

-

thereabouts fell into the Hands of Attila, who inflead of marching on towards Rome, declin'd towards the Right, and fell upon Trevifa, Verona, Mantua, Cremona, Brescio and Bergamo, all which shar'd in the Fate of Aguileia; towards Winter he pass'd the Po, and proceeded with the like Barbarity against Placentia, Parma, and other Places, so that all that Tract of Land, which lyes between the Alps and the Appennine, was reduced to Ashes, Ætius had by this time rais'd a very formidable Army, and having quitted Rome was now upon the Borders of Emilia, ready to oppose Attila; this Confideration made the Barbarian liften more readily to the Advice of his Commanders, who were loaden with the Riches of Italy, and were defirous of enjoying it peaceably at home in their own Countries, rather than run the hazard of lofing all again by engaging with Etius, who in feveral Skirmishes had already cut off some of their advant'd Guards. For this reason they remonstrated to Attile, That he had done enough for the present, and ought to defer the Design be had upon Rome 'eill some other time; for that Ætius, a brave experienc'd Commander, was ready at the Head of a powerful Army to stop bis March, should be direct it towards that City; that he ought to remember the bloody Defeat he met with two Years before in Gaul, and not run the hazard of the like Disaster in Italy, but rather reflect on the Fate of Alarich, who liv'd but a little while after he had taken and plunder'd that City. These Confiderations made him turn back towards the Pe, where Lee, Bishop of Rome, came to him in an Embaffie from Valentinian, and reason'd with so much Courage, Gravity and Eloquence, that he He returns both furpriz'd and mollify'd him, and perfuaded back over him to return over the Danube, upon Promise of the Da-

an Annual Tribute; tho' upon his Departure he threaten'd to afflict Italy more heavily than ever, unless they fent him Honoria, Sifter to the Emperor Valentinian, who is faid to have invited him to this War, hoping to draw fome particular Advantage to her felf out of it; chusing rather to facrifice the Publick Peace and Safety to her private Luft, than live in that Restraint, which for the Reputation of the Court she was continu'd under.

The next Year Arrila, as if he disdain'd either to be at ease himself, or indulge it to others, fell 453. with his usual Fury upon the Alans in Gaul; but Therismend concluding himself concern'd in his Neighbour's Calamities, join'd his Troops with the

GanL

He is again Alans, fought, defeated, and fent him ingloriously defeated in home; where marrying himself to a beautiful Virgin, call'd Hildico, or Indicto, he drunk so much Wine upon his Wedding Night, that he was fuffocated in his Bed by a great Effusion of Blood which usually issu'd out at his Nose; but being hinder'd of that Passage, whilst he lay bury'd in Wine and Sleep, pour'd it felf down into his

Bis Death. Throat and choak'd him. After his Death a Diffention arose among his numerous and ambitious Sons about the Succession, which in the end prov'd the Ruin of that Nation, who just before were thought to have aim'd at nothing less than the Destruction of Mankind; for Ardarich, King of the Gepide, who had follow'd Attila in all his Expeditions, rose up against his Sons, and shook off the Yoke, in which he was follow'd by the other Nations, who afferted and procur'd their former Liberty; for they fought the Hunns, kill'd Ellec, the eldest of Attila's Sons, together with thirty thousand of his Adherents, and by the Confent of the Emperor made a Division of their Territories.

V

lo

W

ha

B

P

th

n

h ei

Ь

h

O'

fu

W

tl

20

d

to

n

II.

he er,

or

IIS

ge

he

an

of

er

ell

ut

15

re

y

r

h

f-

d.

g ın

is

f-

75

10

n

n

0

r

f

is

Valentinian finding himself deliver'd from fo terrible an Enemy, follow'd his vicious Pleasures with a more unbounded Appetite than ever, which this very Year drew upon him the Punishment he had long deferv'd. There was among the Senators one Petronius Maximus, Grandfon to that Maximus who was overthrown by Theodofius the Great, that had marry'd a Wife not more extraordinary for her Beauty than Chastity. With this Lady the Emperor became deeply in Love, and when he found that all his Threats, Promises and Presents were to no purpose, he resolv'd to seize on that by Force, which he could not purchase by his Importunity. He one Day fent for Maximus to Court, and playing with him at Dice won a confiderable Sum of Mony from him, and receiv'd a Ring off his Finger as a Pledge for the Payment of it. This Ring he fent privately to his Wife, and requir'd her, in her Husband's Name, to come and wait upon the Empress Endoxia; the Lady knowing it to be her Husband's Ring, without any Helitation came to Court, and was conducted, by some the Emperor employ'd for that purpose, into a remote Chamber, where Valentinian by force enjoy'd her. She at Valentinifirst imagin'd her Husband privy to the Outrage an Ravishes by reason of the Ring, so that upon her Return the Wife of home the feverely reproach'd him, as the Author Maximus; of his own Difhonour and Infamy. Maximus, furpriz'd at this Discourse, acquainted his Wife with the wicked Artifice of the Emperor, and from that Moment refolv'd to be reveng'd upon Valentinian, but knew it impossible to effect his Destruction whilst Etims liv'd, and therefore thought how to remove him first out of the way; and that he might make Valentinian the more odious to the Army, who ador'd Etims, he effected it by the Emperor's own Hands; for he got some that were raBar.

His Con

and kills

Ætius.

Vol. III near his Person to persuade him that Etims was Ch

Hos

feiz

Dea

ces

nuc

OW

to 3

or]

froi

up

fent

ftri

for

Spa

and

Em

his

by !

his

feen

peri

in 1

that

VIC

tal

hin

Ru

on,

acc

the

dea

to

Re

was

to (

a dangerous Man, that he was contriving how to fer up for himself, and usurp the Imperial Dignity, in order to which he kept Correspondence with the Enemies of the Empire. Valentinian's natural Depravity inclin'd him to be jealous of those he knew to be better than himself, so that he easily believ'd these Suggestions, and concluded his Safety confifted in the Death of Erius, for which reason the ungrateful Prince kill'd him himfelf, and order'd all his intimate Friends to be flain; the Death of . tius was much lamented by the whole Army, who confider'd him as the Bulwark of the Empire, which made a Roman answer Valentinian, when he ask'd him if he had not done well in dispatching Atims That he thought he had cut his Right Hand off with his Left; he was at that time the greatest Soldier in the Empire, being a perfect Master in the Art of War, but withal he had an ambitious aspiring Spirit, which made him an Enemy to all those whose Merit seem'd in any degree to equal his Valentinian was fo far from imagining any one would prefume to revenge upon him the Death of Atius, that he preferr'd several of the Army who had a profound Veneration for that Great Man to be of his Body Guard; to some of these Maximus address'd himself, and prevail'd with two of 'em;

an flain.

known to Posterity by the Name of Oftila and Tran-Valentini- fila, to dispatch Valentinian; accordingly they fell upon him as he was making a Speech to the Soldiers from the Tribunal in the Campus Martius, on the 17th of March, and kill'd him, together with Heraclius his Favourite Eunuch, who courageoully interpos'd and endeavour'd to fave his Master.

A. D. 445. His Charader.

Valentinian was flain in the thirtieth Year of his Reign, and thirty fifth of his Age. During his Government the Empire, which in the time of Honorius Honorius began to decline, may be faid to have been feiz'd with a mortal Diffemper, especially after the Death of his Mother Placidia; for all the great Offices of Honour and Profit were at the Disposal of Eunuchs, who facrific'd the Good of the Publick to their own private Interest and Ambition. After he grew up to Years of Discretion he never undertook any Voyage or Journey farther than from Rome to Ravenna, and from Ravenna back again to Rome. He continu'd lock'd up in his Palace, where he plung'd himself into all fenfual Pleasures; this encourag'd the Barbarians to ftript him, as they did, of fo many of the Provinces, for in his Reign Rome was taken and pillag'd, Africk, Spain, Great Britain, and almost all Gank Germany and Illgricum were difmember'd from the Western Empire: Tho' we must own he was not unhappy in his Wars with that Scourge of God, Attila, whom by his Generals he often defeated, and drove out of his Dominions. Certain it is he was the last that feem'd to be Emperor indeed, in whom a true Imperial Majesty resided; for they that succeeded him in the West were like Meteors and Exhalations, that vanish'd as soon as they appear'd.

V. As Valentinian's Life was scandalous and unferviceable to the Empire, so did his Death prove fatal and destructive to it. Leaving no Sons behind him, it was easie for Maximus, the Author of his Maximus Ruin, to seize on the Purple in the general Confusi- Usurps. on, being a Man very rich and powerful, and was accordingly proclaim'd Emperor by the Guards in the Imperial Palace. His own Wife being lately dead, his first care was to marry Endoxia, Widow to Valentinian, thinking by such a Match to add Reputation and Vigour to his Authority: Endoxia was averse to the thing, but the Tyrant forc'd her to comply, and by that means stain'd Valentinian's Bed.

Q

Q

4

H

n h

[erici stern of hi Appl their their and y being mies, Duty of F Corp Tiber enter expos mis'd himf Grea by th him | City, had I

all I

a tri conj

his I

of C

Ulu

Geric.

nity

med

dals

little of h

tion

the]

ence

Bed, as he had dishonourdhis. He made his Son Palladius Cefar, and marry'd him to Endoxia, Valentinian's Daughter, who had been formerly promis'd to Gandentins, the Son of Atins. Some Writers fay he had not held the Empire twenty four Hours before he began to be weary of the Toil, and repented of his Advancement, reputing Damecles happy, for that he was cumber'd with Royalty for no longer than the space of one Dinner: However, confidering that to descend from so high an Eminence would endanger a Fall, 'he refolv'd to main tain himself in his new Authority, and, if possible, restore it to its ancient Splendor; for which purpose he made Avitus, who had been Prafectus Pras torio in Gaul, General of his Armies. Avieus was descended from one of the most noble and ancient Families in that Country, he was a Man of Learning and Eloquence, and had given many fignal Proofs of his Valour and Conduct; him Maximus fent to conclude a Peace with all the neighbouring Crowns from whom he had reason to apprehend any Difturbance, concluding that when once he had establish d himself, and settled his Affairs at home, he might then deal with 'em at his leifure, and fubdue 'em: But God blasted the Designs of this Paracide, and made his own Folly the Iustrument of his Ruini Tho' he had marry'd Endoxia only for Reasons of State, yet in a short time he grew fondly enamour'd, and thought the readiest way to ingratiate himself with her, and gain her Affections, was to tell her that his Love to her made him desirous of Valentinian's Ruin, which was propos'd and effected purely by his Contrivance for her fake. She hated and mistrusted him before, but being now confirm'd in her Suspicions she was resolv'd to be reveng'd whatever it cost her, and took such a Course to effect it, as in the Issue prov'd fatal to her felf, to Rome, and all

r

į.

μ

S

J.

2

15

It

7 fs

0

15

d

ıt

d

D.

of

d,

IF

er

15

e-

id

in

t-

t,

d

11 all Italy. Early in the Morning the role; and fent a trusty Servant with Letters to Genferich in Africks conjuring him to come and revenge the Death of his Friend and Allie Valentinian, and deliver her out of Captivity, and from the Arms of a Tyrant and Usurper. This Message was very acceptable to Gen- Genserich ferich, who had long wish'd for such an Opportu-invades nity, which he was refolv'd to embrace; and im- Italymediately rigg'd out a very powerful Fleet of Vandals and Moors, and let Sail for Italy, where he was little expected. Maximus was, before the News of his Arrival, in a disconsolate, desponding Condition; the Burden of Empire made him uneasie in the Day-time, and the Terrors of a guilty Conscience diftracted him in the Night: But upon Genferich's Approach he was feiz'd with the utmost Consternation. Instead of providing for the necessity of his Affairs, and comforting by his Presence and Application his unhappy Subjects, who thought their Safety in so imminent a Danger consisted in their Flight, he participated with em in their Fears, and was one of the first that prepar'd to fly. This being observ'd by some Senators that were his Enemies, and that he deferted those whom it was his Duty to protect, they pursu'd him on the twelfth of Tune, and having ston'd him, they dragg'd his Maximus Corps about the Streets, and then threw it into the Slain. Tiber. Three Days after this Execution Genserich enter'd Rome without any Opposition, that now lay expos'd to his Lust and Avarice. Tho' he had promis'd Endoxia to abitain from Plunder, and behave himself with the greatest Moderation; tho' Lee the Great, who was then Pope of Rome, went attended by the chief of the City to meet him, and conjur'd him by all things holy to have Compassion of that City, which even Attila, a sworn Enemy to Christ, had lately exempted from Violation; notwithstanding

m

of 2023

he

Ti

thi

nic

he

the

OD:

00

qu

to

Af

mo

De

Loi

On

and

tion

enc

afte

very

fuc

vice

at fi

fion,

oppo

Tro

farth

fie th

horr

vanc

of al

pell'

ing all which, this barbarous King, who made a Profession of Christianity, in spite of his Faith given to Endoxia, and unmov'd by the Eloquence and more prevailing Tears of the venerable Prelate, gave Genserich it up to the Mercy of his Soldiers, who for four facks Rome teen Days together rag'd with implacable Fury in the midst of it, sparing neither private Dwellings nor publick Buildings; pillaging the very Churches of all the rich Ornaments and confecrated Veffels. among which were those taken formerly by Titus out of the Temple at Ferusalem, and brought to Rome, where they had been hitherto very carefully preferv'd. The Tyrant himself forc'd the Imperial Palace, where he feiz'd upon all the Treasure and rich Moveables, affording the Empress too much reason to repent of the cruel Vengeance she had drawn upon her felf and the City; for he carry'd her and her two Daughters, Placidia and Endoxia Captive with him into Africk, where he marry'd the Eldest to his Son Honoric, and sent the Empress to Constantinople, together with her younger Daughter Placidia, who was afterwards marry'd to Olybrius, one of the Western Emperors.

Martian was much concern'd at the Calamities of the Western Empire, but being grown old and infirm he could not provide any Remedies against 'em, nor think of naming a new Emperor, as the Senate had desir'd him. One indeed bore the Title of Emperor in the West, tho' he held it but a few Months. Avitus, as we observ'd before, had been sent by Maximus into Gaul, where, upon the News of the Tyrant's Death, he was persuaded by Theodorich, King of the Goths, to assume the Purple; who represented to him, That there was no other Person in the Empire sit to bear the Burden, and support the Dignity of it; that the publick Interest, and the Safety of the State requir'd it of him; that he might

1 nd ve

rin

gs

ies is.

ins

to lly

ri-

nd ch

ad

r'd

ia

y'd

m ger

to ot in-

m, ate

of

ew

een

WS

do

ho

for ora

sna

be

gh

might do it without injuring any one, because there appear d no Pretenders to it; that the Soldiers and the People presented it to him, and begg d him to accept of the Imperial Scepter; that as for his part be might affure himself of all the Power and Affistance he could expect from him, the better to support his Title. Avitus, who well forefaw how difficult a thing it would be to preserve himself in that Dignity they were now courting him to accept of, however suffer'd himself to be prevail'd upon by the Officers that were about him, and the Persualions of Theodorick, fo that he was declar'd Emperor ATVITUS on the tenth of July, and immediately fent to ac- declar'd quaint the Senate of Rome with his Promotion, and Emperor. to inform 'em, that as foon as he had compos'd the Affairs in Gaul he intended to appear in Person among 'em. Accordingly he gave Orders for the Defence of those Parts lying on the other fide the Loire from the Incursions of the Franks, and those on the South fide from the Violence of the Gorhs, and engag'd his Friend Theodorich to defend that Portion of Spain which as yet acknowledg'd an Obedience to the Empire from the Infults of the Suevi; after which he fet forward for Rome, attended by a very gallant Army, compos'd for the most part of fuch Goths as Theodorich had appropriated to his Service. This made the Senate and People receive him at first with an outward Show of Joy and Submisfion, because indeed they were not strong enough to oppose him; but as soon as he had dismis'd his Troops, upon a Prefumption that he should have no farther Occasion for 'em, then they began to tellifie their Aversion to him, especially out of an Abhorrence to the Memory of Maximus, who first advanc'd him, and whom they condemn'd as the Spring of all their present Calamities; they therefore expell'd him out of the City, and forc'd him to divest and is depos'd. worn it eight or ten Months. This he did at Placentia, of which Place he got himself to be ordain'd Bishop, but finding that Character could not secure him from the Fury and Indignation of the Senatta he resolv'd to take Sanctuary in the Church of St. Julian in Auvergne, where he was born, but dy'd upon the Road as he was travelling thither.

In the mean time Theodorich, according to his Promise given Avitus., march'd with a numerous Army out of Aquitain into Spain, where he fought with Ricciarius, King of the Suevi, Six Leagues off from the City of Afterga, overthrew him, took him Prisoner in his Flight, and put him to Death; after this Victory he wasted at his Pleasure Gallicia and But whilft he with his Goths was diverts Portugal. ed thus in Spain, and the Roman Army follow'd Avitus into Italy, the Franks made use of the Opportunity they had been often wishing for, and settled themselves in the middle of Gaul, establishing their Kingdom at Paris, and by that means tore another Principality out of the Body of the Western Empire.

A.D. 457. This Loss was follow'd by another in Africk, where Genserich, not contented with the late Violation of the Peace, crown'd one Injustice with another, and seiz'd on that Part of Africk which in the Partition of the Country had been resign'd to Valentinian; so that the Romans now had nothing less there, for it continu'd intire in the Possession of the Vandals 'till the Reign of Justinian. In this miserable defenceless Condition was the Empire of the West, an Empire in name, but in reality no of ther than the Shadow of her former Greatness, deserted by her Friends, insulted by her Enemies, and grown the very Sport of Fortune, that in every resispect had abandon'd her. 'Tis true the Emperor Martian

Ma as h

whi peac Barl

Maj

of the

plici and Dea

the that

lecti had

the Cro

thou

dom the

> Gen peri

declar to th

Mini tion,

he e

the

.

t

à

d

d

b

h

b

b

0

A.A.A.

d

(#)

Martian was nearly touch'd at her Confusion, but as he was preparing to relieve and restore her, and revenge upon the Barbarians the Affronts the Roman Majesty had sustain'd, he was prevented by Death, Martian which put an end to all his future Deligns, after a peaceable Reign of fix Years: For in his time the Barbarians gave little or no Disturbance on that side of the Empire, which is imputed by most Writers to his extraordinary Wisdom and Circumspection. He is much commended for the Innocence and Sim- His Chaplicity of his Manners, and his Zeal for the Defence rader. and Purity of Religion; and especially in that at his Death he left the Army subject to the Directions of the Senate, and the Senate fo modest and unanimous that no Heats, Divisions, or finister ambitious Practices appear'd in the Choice of a Successor, the Election falling upon Leo, a Thracian by Birth, who Leo eletted had fignaliz'd himself upon many extraordinary Oc- Emperer. casions, and was acknowledg'd by all to be worthy the Imperial Dignity. Leo, as foon as he was Crown'd by Anatolins, Patriarch of Constantinople, thought it high time to supply the Western Empire with a worthy Head, and refolv'd to promote Majo- Majorian rianus to that high Dignity, a Man of great Wif- Emperor in dom and Virtue, and the most capable to restore the West. the Peace of Europe : Having therefore made him General of the Armies, as the next Step to the Imperial Power, he fent him with a noble Train into Italy, where by the general Consent of all he was declar'd Augustus; and applying himself seriously to the Administration of publick Affairs, he made choice of the ablest Men in the Empire to be the Ministers of State; making Ricimer, a Goth by Nation, but a Man of great Experience, and on whom he entirely depended, Commander in chief of all his Forces; his first care was to secure Italy against the Infults of Genferich, who rigg'd out a Fleet this Year

A. D.

458.

Year with an intent to fall upon Campania, and enrich himself with the Spoils of that Country, whilst the Empire was without a Governor; but Majorianus march'd against him with a strong Army and gave him Battel, in which the Vandals were overthrown, and forc'd to fly to their Ships for Safety. After this he supply'd all the Coasts of Italy that Iye towards Africk with good Garrisons, and in the beginning of the Year following fitted out a strong Fleet, with an intent to follow the Vandals into A. frick, and make that the Seat of the War. All this while Theodorich was purfuing his Conquests in Spain. piercing with his Troops into the Heart of Ports. gal without any Relistance, and was fate down before the City of Merida, but rais'd the Siege upon an Intelligence of some Commotions in his own Dominions in Gaul, which oblig'd him to return home; where, during the Absence of the Forces of the Empire in Africk, he fell upon some of the Roman Dominions in Ganl, and extending his Conquests up as far as the Rhône, he belieg'd, took and pillag'd the wealthy City of Lyons, but was at last compelled to submit to Majorian, who granted him Peace upon Condition he lent him some of his Forces, which he defign'd to employ against the Vandals in Africk, which he was very ambitious of recovering out of the Hands of the Barbarians. The better to inform himself of the Strength of the Enemy, the State of the Country, and how the Inhabitants stood affected to the Roman Interest, he is faid to have enter'd upon a Design full of Danger for a Person of his Dignity; for he disguis'd himself, and went in the Quality of an Ambassador from the Roman Emperor, sent into Africk to make Genserich some Overtures of a Peace. Genserich receiv'd him very kindly, show'd him the Magnificence of his Court, his Treasury and Arsenal; all which when Majorianus had had Ari he ger and

tani mit that the greathe l

obserio

wea

adva Stat

were fore the Con that on t

not Befo

fo cl which as fa Ricin forme on t

Wou as the

had Hane

こはとは у,

ye e-

1g 4-

us

n,

u-

e-

on 0-

e;

n-

0-

P. d. d. P. h

k, of

m of

t-

d

us

10

er-

d-

is

WS

d

had fufficiently contemplated, and discover'd all he had a Desire to be inform'd of, he return'd to his Army, and immediately belieg'd Carthage, which he was in a fair way of taking when he fell dangeroufly fick, and fo was oblig'd to raife the Siege and Embark for Italy, after a great part of Mauritania, furpriz'd at his fudden Expedition, had fubmitted to him, and they were not without Hopes that the whole Country might be reduc'd. Indeed the Empire feem'd to receive new Life from his great Abilities and Industry, by Virtue of which A.D. he had forc'd the Goths to fue for a Peace, as we observ'd before, and not long after, by his vigorous Preparations, struck such a Terror into Gonferich, who was aw'd by his Virtue, that he grew weary of the War, and follicited a Peace, which was granted him by Majorianus upon Terms very advantageous to the Empire. But the Hopes the State conceiv'd of a Recovery under his Hands, were no other than a lightning, as it's call'd, before Death; for whilst he was busied in settling the Affairs of Ganl, Risimer and Severus form'd a Conspiracy against him, in which it was agreed that Ricimer should dispatch him, and Severus seize on the Empire; for Ricimer being a Barbarian had not the Confidence to usurp the Purple himself. Before Majorianus left Gaul he press'd the Alani fo close, that to divert him they Invaded Italy, which he made hafte to relieve, and follow'd 'em as far as Tortona in Liguria, where he was met by Ricimer, who at first bretended he had brought fome Forces to his Affistance, but murder'd him on the seventh of August, and so gave a Mortal der'd by Wound to the Empire in the West. So soon Ricimer. as this was done Ricimer return'd to Ravenna, where the Soldiers, who had been prepar'd before Hand, declar'd Severus Emperor without waiting Aa 3 for 461.

Majoria-

Cl

lo !

kne

oft

his

fwe

him

ply

drin

leng

W

ver

Ma

VIC

then

Wea

mu

ver

adv

the

had

Ma

Em

not

felf

thei

out

twe

clar

clan

Pov

us h

firm

Fatl

if p

for any Orders or Approbation from Constantinople. This new Emperor, after some successful Emerprises against the Vandals, who had upon the Death of Majorianus attack'd the Islands adjoining to A frick, and had defeated the Alani who had invaded Liguria, was in the fourth Year of his Reign porton'd by his Friend Ricimer, after which was an Inter-regnum for some time in the West.

The Death Great, Pope of Rome,

Not long before this dy'd Lee the Great, who of Leo the had been Pope of Rome for one and twenty Years together, a Man of a great Mind and extraordinary Qualifications, remarkable as in feveral other respects, so particulary in this, that whereas his Predecessors founded their Pretensions to a Superiority upon the Dignity of the Imperial City, and the Constitutions of some precedent Councils, he obferving the Distractions under which the Western Empire labour'd, and which threaten'd it with a Dissolution, and that the City of Rome, which had been often taken and pillag'd, was in great Danger of losing her Sovereignty, chose rather to establish the Precedency he claim'd, as Pope of Rome, over all other Bishops whatever, upon those Words of Christ, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I build my Church; from thence claiming a peculiar Prerogative, as the immediate Successor of St. Peter. The Christian World has too much reason to know how this Title has been fince profecuted.

> After the Death of Severus, who, tho' an Ufurper, fell lamented by the Senate and People of Rome, Genserich once more broke out into Hostilities, and behav'd himself more like a Pirate than a Prince, fometimes infesting the Coasts of Italy, at others falling upon Gaul, or the Neighbouring Islands, where, after having seiz'd on whatever things of value the Country afforded, he return'd loaden with the Spoils to Africk; and was usually

んか山み

12-

gn

an

10

rs

y

e-

e-

ty

he

b-

m

d er

th er of

u ę.

T.

W

r-

of

i-

at

g

er

d

y

fo uncertain in his Expeditions, that they never knew where to expect or oppose him; being very often at a loss himself what Course to steer upon his first putting out to Sea, as appear'd by his Anfwer one Day to his Admiral, who demanding of him to what Part he would have him Sail, he reply'd, Thither where God shall call, and the Wind

These his continu'd Depredations made Lee at length resolve to nominate an Emperor for the West, where Ricimer, ever fince the Death of Severus, had govern'd as he pleas'd, tho' without the Marks of Empire, and done the State no small Service against the Vandals. Leo made choice of An- ANTHEthemius, a Man of Noble Extraction, and very MIUS. wealthy, who, after he had behav'd himself with much Courage in the Wars against the Hunns, qver whom he had obtain'd many Advantages, was advanc'd to the Principal Command in the Army; these Qualifications, and the Personal Kindness Leo had for him, made him consider him as the fittest Man for a Collegue, and accordingly declar'd him Emperor in the West. Some say this Choice was not only confirm'd by the Confent of Ricimer himfelf and the Senate, but conferr'd upon him at their united Requests; accordingly Anthemius set out from the East, and arriv'd at Rome on the twelfth of April, where he was receiv'd, and declar'd Angustus with the general Applause and Acclamation of the People: For as much as Ricimer's Power was known to be absolute in the West, it was at first agreed that he should marry Anthemius his Daughter, and by that means the better confirm the Sovereign Power in the Hands of his Father-in-Law, and to make the Empire stronger, if possible, by Alliances, Leo marry'd his Daughter Leontia to Martian, the Son of Anthemins, so that 467.

A24

Cl

mai ly

the of

wh

Ab

wh

To red

tha

and the

the

the

Fea duc

and

froi

ing

troi by

and

En

Por

him

hin

cess in h

mil

the

Mai fuff

baf

fub

filife

and lay

for some time both Courts were employed in Publy lick Triumphs and Diversions, as if the ancient Glories of the Empire were blooming a-fresh, and there were no Enemies able to diffurb em; tho Leo in the midst of these Solemnities had his Thoughts upon Genserich's Depredations and Piracies, and what Course was to be taken to restrain him; for he had lately infested Illyricum and Peloponnesus, which being Members of the Eastern Empire more particularly concern'd him; for this read fon he fitted out a very strong Fleet, said to confift of no less than eleven hundred Sail well equipp'd, and provided with all forts of Ammuniti-Basiliscus, on and Provision, and made Basiliscus, Brother to Admiral of his Wife Verina, Admiral; and at the fame time Leo's Fleet; desir'd and advis'd Anthemius to make what Forwardness he could in his Preparations for the War. Genserich in the mean while had recourse to his ufual Devices, and privately inform'd Olybrias, a Senator, very Rich and of great Interest, That if he would join with him at that Conjuncture against the two Emperors, he would employ all his Forces to make him Emperor of the West; Obstrins willing ly liften'd to his Proposals, and from that time forward fell off from his Affections to Anthe CHART LANCE LANCED mius.

Before Lee suffer'd his Fleet to put to Sea, he thought it Prudence to secure Mercellianus to his Interest, who had been formerly a great Friend to Atins, after whose Murder he revolted from the Emperor, and perfuaded others to follow his Example, with whom he retird into Dalmatia. where he fortify'd himself in Defiance of the Empire, and grew very rich and powerful in the Country; but Leo fo effectually prevail'd upon him by the Intervention of some who had a Friendship for both, that he enter'd into his Service, and commanded

manded an Army in Sardinia, which had been lately feiz'd by the Vandals, whom he drove our of the Island, and having restor'd it to the Obedience of the Roman Empire proceeded into Sicily, for which he hop'd to effect the same Deliverance. About the fame time Leo's Forces landed in Africk, where Heraclius with an advanc'd Party took the Town of Tripely, and had Bafilifeus march don directly to Carthage he might eafily have mafter'd that City, and with it the rest of the Country, and so have put an end to the War at once. For who mifthe News of the loss of Tripoly and Sardinia, and carries in the appearance of so powerful a Fleet, so distracted the Expethe Barbarians that they were feiz'd with a Panick dition. Fear; but by his dilatory Proceedings and ill Conduct he gave Genferich time to look about him, and learn to despise him; whether this proceeded from his Fear and Cowardice, or his Avarice, being corrupted by a great Sum of Mony fent him from Genferick, or whether he was perfuaded to it by Afray who advis'd him to prolong the War, and thereby make himfelf more confiderable to the Empire, the readiest way to attain the Imperial Power, to which he promis'd in time to advance him, is uncertain. After is thought to have given him this wicked Countel, left Leo, upon his Succels, should grow too Bold and Potent, and have it in his Power to ruin him and his Factious Heretical Family. Whatever the Reasons were, Genserich improv'd the Advantage, rais'd all the Forces he could, Mann'd out his Fleet, and that he might gain time fufficient to provide himfelf, he defir'd, by his Ambaffadors sent to Bafilifens, time to resolve either to fubmit to the Emperor, or continue the War. Baflifeus without any scruple consented to a Cessation, and in the mean time had no Care of the Fleet, but lay open to the Practices of the Enemy, who one Night, cu

hi

Ra

fo

ſŧί

a

M

gr

ah

OU

gr

fo

fo

of

hi

W

E

te

W

fe

fo

fi

tr

be

an

to

 α

th

bi

n

he

th

h

to

A.D. 368.

Night, whilft the Romans were a-fleep, took the Advantage of a favourable Wind, and bore down upon 'em with fome Fire-Ships prepar'd for that purpose, which they let drive with full Sail upon the Roman Navy, and the next Morning before the Remans could have time to Tack, and recover themfelves out of their Disorder, they drew up into a Line of Battel; but Basiliscus was so far from venturing an Engagement, that he tack'd about, and made way with the best Sail he had; the rest of the Fleet seeing the Admiral quit his Station follow'd his Example, and crowded after him, faving themselves where, and in what manner they could. The Land-Army left behind in Africk, being thus abandon'd, was easily defeated by the Vandals, who kill'd some and made the rest Prisoners; whilst Bafilifens made hafte to Constantinople, where the People were so incens'd against him, that he was forc'd to fly for Refuge into the great Church, and at last, by the Emperor's Permission, retir'd into Thrace. Thus all these mighty Hopes and Warlike Preparations vanish'd into Air; Genserich grew more Bold and Presumptious upon his Deliverance, and the great Check and Disappointment of the Empire. Marcellianus, who had hitherto met with great Success in Sicily, was over-power'd by the Vandals, who, after the Miscarriage of the Imperial Fleet, were fent in great Numbers to the Relief of the Island, and the Romans, frustrated of their great Expectations, grew heartless and dispirited.

Leo knew very well that Aspar was in a great measure the Author of these Missortunes; he was the great Patron of the Arian Faction, and so potent in Friends and Dependants, that Lee found it necessary to dissemble with him in order to ruin made Cæ- him, for which reason he created his Son Cafar, gave him his Daughter in Marriage, and by that Afpar's Son far.

means

means endeavour'd to allure him into a fenfeless Security, if he found it impossible to reduce him to his Duty and Loyalty. The Inhabitants of Constantinople were much displeas'd at this Promotion, for they knew Afpar and all his Family were obstinate Arians, and were enrag'd when they beheld a Son of that Family defign'd Successor to an Old Man in the Imperial Seat. In the mean time Afpar grew more Infolent upon his Son's Advancement, and could not conceal from the People his ambitious Defigns; this provok'd the Citizens to that degree that they infulted him in the Hippodrome, and fo terrify'd him with their Threats, that he was forc'd to fly and take Sanctuary in the Church of takes San-Chalcedon. The Emperor fent Gennadius, Patriarch Suary at of Constantinople, after him, and promis'd him and Chalcedon. his Sons all the Security they could defire, if they would return; but they refus'd to ftir, unless the Emperor himself would come in Person, and Protect 'em from the Infolence of the Rabble; he went accordingly, took 'em home to his Palace, feated 'em at his own Table, and by his Condescention perfuaded 'em to imagine he had either forgotten or forgiven their Practices against him. But finding they were Persons in no measure to be trufted, and that he must either prevent them, or be prevented by 'em, he order'd Zeno, an Isaurian, to cut off their Heads the next time they came to Court. Zeno, being a hardy resolute Man, pun- A. D. ctually executed his Commission, by which means the most potent Family in the Empire, which had Afpar and brought great Difficulties upon the State, and had his sous no less afflicted the Church, was destroy'd in the Slain. height of their Ambition, to the great Safety of the Emperor and Satisfaction of the People. From hence Princes may draw this usual Maxim, Never to suffer their Ministers to grow too great, lest in time time they become more powerful and popular than themselves; and ambitious Courtiers ought to be cautious in their exalted Fortunes of making their Masters jealous of their Greatness, lest they provoke the same Power that lifted 'em up sto turn to their

The Arian Hereticks, who were then very powerful and numerous throughout both the Empires, were highly affronted at the Death of Affar Ricimer, and his Sons, but no one was more displeas'd and angry at it, irritated than their Friend and Countryman Richmer; who knowing himself powerful in his Interest at home, having the Chief Command in the Army, and no less formidable in his Friends abroad, began at this time to practife against Anthemius, and study'd how to deprive him both of his Life and Dignity. Evarich, King of the Goths in Spain and Ganl, and Genferich, King of the Vandals in Africk, the Terror as well of the East as the West, were his great Friends upon account of his Original and Religion, both which were ready to create or countenance any Disturbances in the Empire, so that he made no doubt of destroying Anthemius, and in his Destruction revenge upon Leo the Death of Aspar. However he either wanted Art or Care enough to weave his Designs so fine, as to make 'em pals unobserv'd by the watchful Eye of Anthemins, who began first to distrust, and then express his Resentments against him, and the Coals of Diffention were by their Friends on both fides blown up to that degree, that Ricimer was glad to provide for his Safety in Milan, where in appearance he defir'd to live at Peace, but was inwardly resolv'd upon Anthemius his Ruin. The Nobility of those Parts were very much concern'd at this Breach, which they were afraid would at length plunge Italy into new Mischiefs; they therefore undertook der and met was den tion De the Ric lebi lift lofe Me in l his

Ch

tiat Co a.V wh Ric but Re on. blo

Spe

fent

WO

fho

ter. thi in

wh du fou

dertook to mediate betwixt him and the Emperor, and perfuaded him to a Submission; they recommended Epiphanius, Bishop of Pavia, to negotiate a Reconciliation with the Emperor. Epiphanius was a Man in great Esteem for his Probity, Prudence, Eloquence and Capacity; which Confiderations made Ricimer willing to comply with their Defires, and accordingly the Bishop accepted of the Employment. Anthemius knew the scope of Ricimer's Designs, in his choice of a Person so celebrated for his Sanctity; for if he now refus'd to listen to Ricimer's Propositions of Peace, he should lofe himfelf in the Opinion of honest well-meaning Men, and if he embrac'd 'em he put it once more in his Power to undo him. The Bishop deliver'd his Message to him in a very elegant, pathetical Speech, and obtain'd his Desire: Ambemius confented to a Peace, which he knew in his own Thoughts would not be long observ'd, and dismis'd the Bishop highly pleas'd with the Success of his Negotiation.

After this there feem'd for some time to be a good Correspondence between 'em, but the Year following Ricimer broke out into open Rebellion, and with a very strong Army belieg'd Anthemius in Rome, where the Inhabitants, sensible of the Injustice of Anthemius Ricimer's Caule, were well affected to Anthemius, in Rome. but were afraid to declare themselves because the Rebel appear'd the more powerful. Ricimer press'd on the Siege with much Vigour, and so closely block'd up the Town, that first a Famine, and after that a grievous Plague rag'd within the Walls. In this condition the Emperor's whole Dependance lay in the Succours he expected from the Goths in Ganl, who were moving to his Assistance under the Conduct of Bilimer, but Ricimer turn'd head against 'em, fought, and destroy'd a great Number of 'em, among

A. D. 472. Belieges

Ch

Suci

low

proc

proi

volu

min

potia

fign

and

avo

Arn

Oftr

iterr

Prof

their

the . tuni

Bor

dem

forc'

and

and

who Offe

his 1

GANI

in fu

ons,

and

thof

time

tack'

took to Ti

had t

a Pat

mong whom was their Commander; and exalted by this Success renew'd the Siege with redoubled Vigour: And the City being much weaken'd by Detachments, by Famine, and the Plague, he broke into it on the eleventh of July, where he rag'd with as much Fury as Alarich or Genserich had done before him: Thus was the Capital City of the World taken no less than three times, within the space of fixty three Years, by her most implacable Enemies. He permitted his Soldiers to plunder the Citizens, exempting only two Regions in which he had fettled his own Quarters. He laid hold of Anthemius, and without any regard had to him as his Emperor or and Dies bimfelf.

Death,

puts him to Father-in-Law he put him to Death, and establish'd Olybrius Emperor in his room. But God thought fit shortly after to punish him for his inhuman Cruelties, for he was seiz'd with a violent Pain in his Bowels, of which he dy'd on the eighteenth of Angust, and went to give a just Account of his Actions to the Impartial Judge of the Universe, after he had domineer'd like a fecond Stilicho ever fince the Death of Valentinian. From a common Soldier he advanc'd himself by his Valour to the highest Posts in the Army, and dispos'd of the Western Em pire according to his own Fancy. He had feiz'd upon the Church of St. Agatha in Rome for the Service of his Arian Hereticks, who could not be remov'd out of it 'till the Popedom of Gregory I. near one hundred and twenty Years after.

Olybrius was scarce warm in his new Dignity before he follow'd his great Patron Ricimer, in Gratitude to whose Memory he made his Grandson Gundicarius a Patrician; an Honour first created by Com-Stantine the Great, and in so great Esteem from the very beginning, that they who were dignify'd with that Title took place of the Prafetti Pratorio themfelves.

Oly-

Olybrius in his Death left two Competitors to the Succession, one supported by Gundibarius, who following the Example of his Grandfather Ricimer had proclaim'd Glycerius Emperor at Ravenna; the other GLycerius promoted by Leo, who much refenting the late Revolutions in Rome, especially the Death of Anthemins, made choice of Julius Nepus, the Son of Nepotianus, to whom he marry'd his Neece, and defign'd him Cefar. Whilst Italy was thus distracted and broken by Factions, Genferich, her ancient and avow'd Enemy, did not only oppress her by his Arms in her African Provinces, but encourag'd the Ofregoths at once to invade the Eastern and Western Empire, to which they were animated by the Prospect of a great Booty. Hereupon Theodomir The Office their King, observing the distracted Condition of goths inthe Roman Empire, thought he had now an Oppor- wade the tunity of encroaching upon it, and enlarging his Borders, and accordingly order'd his Brother Vindemir, or Windemir, to break into Italy, whilst he forc'd himself into Illyricum, a Country stronger and better guarded. Vindemir dy'd in his March, and lest the Execution of his Enterprize to his Son, who was met by Ambassadors from Glycerius with Offers of a great Sum of Mony, if he would forbear his Designs upon Italy, and divert his March into Ganl, where he had Relations of his own that reign'd in full Power. Vindemir accepted of the Conditions, and went and join'd with the Vifigoths in Gaul, and by that Junction added much to the Power of those Nations both in Ganl and Spain. In the mean time Theodomir, having defeated the Sarmata, attack'd Naissus, the Capital City of all Illyricum, took it, and forttfy'd it. After this he march'd into Thessaly, where he took Heracles and Larissa, and had the like Defign upon Thessalonica; but Clarianus a Patrician was got into the Town before him, and with

6

P

0

r

U

1

3

2

18

-

•

CH Vol. III Rol each

-213

had

him

veri

tioci

Pete

aM

beer

Ad

mad

fons

Err

thei

Zen

Ant

rifts

Cer

7994 Supp

frit

ven

vey

CO-6 Fel

the

pure

the

don

him dur

thai

and

Dog

Sab

Py'o

with a good Garrison defended it. 'till by the Emperor's Order he fent out some Ambassadors with very rich Presents to Theodomir, who condescended to a Peace upon condition that the Eastarn Part of Illyricum was refign'd up to his Oftrogoths, to which Lee readily confented. By this we may fee how much the present Emperors were degenerated from the Virtues of their Predecessors, since instead of protecting and enlarging their Dominions by their Courage, they were content to preferve 'em by their Prefents and Entreaties.

afflicted.

As these Barbarians distress'd and distracted the Empire by their Arms, so they afflicted and divi-The Church ded the Church by their Herefies. The whole Nation of the Goths were obstinate Arians, for the Emperor Valens, who was himself the great Patron of Arinaism, when requested to send em some Bishops for their Conversion, made choice of none but such as were the great Affertors of that damnable Herefie, who by their Doctrine took care to convert em from Idolatry to Blasphemy, and taught 'em to deny the Divinity of the Eternal Son of God, to the great Detriment of the Church, and Scandal of Christianity.

> These Goths, wheresoever they planted themselves by the force of their Arms, took care by the fame means to establish their Herefie; and rais'd such cruel Persecutions against the true Believers, as the Church hardly ever fuffer'd from Idolaters. this means the Western Empire became polluted with Arianism, whilst the East was no less distracted by the Herefies of Euryches and Nestorius; and herein the Father of Lies had a great Advantage, for whoever zealously oppos'd the Nestorian Errors was branded with the Eurychian, and so on the contrary, by which means the Church was rent afunder, and the truly Catholick were to move as between two

Rocks,

h

中大中

m

II.

Įľ.

ic

3-

1-

h

e, m

k

t

1-

ŞS

e

-

e

y

y

10

S

d

Rockil to the great blazard of their Faith, that on each fide was threaten'd with a Shipwreck.

Leon in recompence of the great Services Ziene Zeno marhad done him upon the Family of Afpar, marry'd ries Leo's him to his Daughter Ariadne, and made him Go. Daughter. vernor of the East, the Capital of which being Antioch he went to refide there, carrying with him one Perer firnam'd the Fuller, who had formerly been a Monk in the Monastery of the Acemites, but had been expell'd from thence for his Debaucheries, and Adherence to the Entichian Herelie, of which he made open Profession. Having met with some Perfons of Quality who were infected with the fame Errors, he infinuated himself by his Platteries into their Friendship, and by that means got Access to Zena, and was favourably received by him. At Antioch he grew acquainted with feveral Apollinariffs, call'd fo from an Arch-Heretick in the Fourth Century, who taught that Jefus Chrift was not animated with a Human Soul, the want of which was supply'd by the Divinity; that the Flesh he receiv'd from the Virgin descended originally down from Hear ven, and only pass a through Mary as through a Conveyance; and that in adoring it we are to believe it co-effential and co-eternal with the Divinity; that in Jefus Christ there were two distinct Sons, one of God, the other of the Virgin; that he was at first conceived purely like other Men, but that after his Conception the Word descended, and operated in him as it had done before in the Prophets, without being united to him; that by his good Works he had obtain a his Grandure and Perfection, and was now without a Body; that the Divinity Suffer'd upon the Cross; that it dy'd, and was rais'd again; with several other as absurd Dogma's, in which he resembled the Manichees and Sabellians, and fome of which were afterwards copy'd by the Entychians. With these Hereticks Pe-recjoin'd himself, to calumniate Marryriss, Bithon of the Place, accusing him for a Nestorian, because he received the Council of Chalcodor, wherein En tuches and his Doctrine were condemn'd; and the he might he the better able to usurp his See, he per funded Zeno, dither by himfelfor fome other Apo flares of the fame Opinions, that the Church of Antioch would never be in order whilft Marryring pro fided in it more which Lee being advis'd; he lent for the Bulhop of Constantinople, the better to inform himself of the Truth of the Allegations urg dagains him on Marryrian was fo po werfully protected at Confrancinapierby Genadius, wPatriarch of The City that the Emperor was made ferifible of his Lingence, and the Malige of his Adversary Peter, who in his Absence had sdiz'd upon the Episcopal Chair, and created one Juhn Bishop of Apamea, who had for merly been depos'd. The Emperor being inform'd of his wicked Practices, order'd Peter to be banish'd. and fent Martyrins back to his Church; who upon his Return finding a great Division among the People, and that Zeno favour'd and protected his Adversaries, publickly abdicated himself from the Bishoprick, laving, I renounce a disobedient Clargy, & rebellious People, and a defiled Church, refereing no more to my felf than the Sacerdoral Dignity and fo divested himself of the Episcopal Ornaments, to the great Det iment of the Truth and Encouragement of its Enemies. Land operated by brown and

A. D. 474.

About this time Least who had held the Reins of the I maire almost eighteen Years together, was Leo Dies, feiz'd with a Diarrhea, which was attended with a Feaver, and carry'd him off in a short time! "He was a great Prince, wife and wirtuous, and truly affectionate to the Catholick Religion, as appears by feveral Laws he made in favour of it; and the many Churches he built for Religious Worship. Howe

ACL

mor regre Ir we c pero Dig and Imp of w Afte the . Wen

D

of th

ties a

fure:

the

fento

ver

to t cien

cms :

Het

Som

10 al

Em

hern

him

fathe

catio with Very difat

aften Aigno nessi

Clara

Tene

ver he is justly tand for his too great Indulgence to the Aruses, and blam'd for that he was not fufficiently cautious whom he preferr d, fuch as Bafilifand Zeno, who both provide hold Affertors of Herefie, and drew great Calamities upon the Empire! Some fay he ordain'd his Grandfon Lea, Son of Zeno and his Daughter Ariadne, his Succession in the Empire, and appointed Zono for his Guardian, brill he was at Years of Diferetion to govern the State himself: Howeverit were, he survived not his Grandfatheradove ten Months, and dy'd when he was no more than two Years of Age, and so uncapable of regretting the Dignity he loft. M. of mond simer

In the mean time Julius Nepols whom Leos is we observed before, had appointed for Western Ems peron, hearing Glacer as had poffest dinimiel of that Dignity, fet fail for Italy with a very strong Fleet, and landing near Rome, oblig'd Glycerian to quit the Imperial Burples and detire to Salone in Dalmain; of which Place he made him to be ordain de Buhop. Aften which Neper was declared Emperor at Rome, Nepos dithe Affairs of which City after he had fettled, he clar'd Emwent and refided at Ravennant ; affinish some my peror at

d

d

ū

r

3

.

During thefe Troubles Evarieb, or Farith, King Rome: of the Gothi in Gant, encouraged by to many Varieties and Alterations, which had in fo high a meafure weaken'd the Empire, fell into the Territories the Romans had Will left in that Country. Nepos fento Epiphanes, Bishop of Pavia, whom we had occ cation to make mention of before, to treat of a Peace with the Goth: The Bilhop managed the Negotiation very prudently, and concluded a Treaty in no Point disadvantageous to the Romanou But Enrich foon after the he had fivor religiously to observe the Agreement, forcibly feiz'd upon Armagnac, Rovergne Perituent and damofin, oand at last attempred Clarmont, the Capital of Anveryor; but was course geoufly Bb 2 tooner geoufly repuls'd by Etdicius, Son of Aviens, the late Emperor, affifted by Sidonius Apallinaris, his Brow ther-in-Law, who was Bishop of the Place, who is faid to have wrought Miracles by his Prayers, Exhortations, and Letters to several Persons of Qual lity, in which he implor'd their Succour in behalf of the diffressed City. Ecdicius is reported to have made a Sally in the Day-time, attended with no more than eighteen Horfe, with which he struck such Terror into the Enemy that he put 'em into Diforder, travers'd through their whole Army, kill'd all that came in his way, forc'd 'em for some time to retire from the Walls, and return'd fafe into the City without the Loss of one Man. An Action, if true, worthy to be compar'd with the Exploits of the first Roman Heroes, and sufficient to prove that their ancient Valour was not quite extinct, thoulike the departing Soul it furviv'd only in Particulars, whereas before it animated the whole Body

However Eurich failing in his Attempts upon the State, rag'd with equal Fury against the Church expelling or impoverishing all those who would not embrace Arianism; and when any of the Pastorsof the Church dy'd he suffer'd none but Arians to fucceed 'em, infomuch that in feveral Places the The diffra- Churches lay in Ruins, the Entrances choak'd with Hed Condi- Brambles, and Grafs growing about the Altars; and tion of the this was observable not only in Country Villages but in great and populous Towns, where the People refus'd to frequent the Publick Assemblies. With fuch Calamities was the Church then oppres'd, in Church.

Africk under the Tyranny and Persecution of General ferich, in the West under the Cruelties of the Aris ans, and under the like Cruelties of the Eutychians Zeno Em- in the East; where Zeno upon the Death of his Father Lee was acknowledg'd for Emperor, and was suspected to have contributed to his Death. He was no fooner peror at Constantinople;

plu ing low W felv

Ch

Soot

Wi ror def fen for W2

tho of lau for

> fo ple H CI Ci

> > th th th fev

tit th th C

th re ac Ii

li

sooner advanced to the Imperial Power, but he plung'd himself into all manner of Vices, refraining from no filthy or flagitious Act, but so wallow'd in his Debaucheries, that he thought it the Weakness of a base and low spirit, to cover themfelves in Darknels at the Commission of their Wickedness, but like the Grandeur of an Emperor, to fin in broad Day-light; and as he was thus deform d in his Mind, so was his Body faid to refemble a Satyr more than any Human Appearance, for he was cover'd all over with Hair, his Shape was deform'd, and his Physiognomy ridiculous, tho' they who beheld him, and knew the Temper of his Mind, found more reason to tremble than laugh at the fight of him. As he was thus De form'd in his Body, and Debauch'd in his Morals, fo was he no less Corrupt in his Religious Principles; for he openly avow'd himself the Protector of Herefie and Schism, and therefore drew upon the Church Calamities unexpressible. As soon as the Citizens of Antioch heard of his Advancement to the Imperial Throne, those of Peter's Faction fent their Agents to Constantinople, who, in the Name of the reft, defir'd his Re-establishment, and brib'd feveral of the Courtiers to favour em in their Petition to the Emperor, who immediately granted their Request, and Peter was once more seated in the Apoltolick Chair of that Province; from whence he immediately denounc'd an Anathema against the Council of Chalcedon, and maintain'd the Errors of the Apollinarians, and restor'd such Bishops to their respective Sees, as had been formerly depos'd for adhering to Entyches. But God fuffer'd not the Impiety of Zene to go long unpunish'd; for Basilifens observing him to be a lewd, effeminate Prince, despis'd and abhorr'd by the People for his abominable Vices, drew together a Company of Male-B b 3 contents, contents, to whom he join'd feveral of his own flies into Mauria.

Friends and Adhe ents, who, united together, ra a great Sedition against Zeno in Constantinopie. Zeno, terrify'd at the Uproar, fied in a great Fing with his Wife into Isauria, where he was we belov'd; and Basiliscus was by the Soldiers salute Emperor, who, having allum'd the Title, cor ferr'd that of Cafar upon his Son Marchs; and the Basiliscus did not long enjoy his Dignity, but was Dethron'd, put to Death, and Zeno restor'd: yet, because he grew no better for his Missortunes but perfever'd in his brutish fensual way of Life he at length came to a violent End, procur'd by his own Wife, who caus'd him one Day, Drupk, a he was after an excessive Debauch of Wine, to be thut up in a Sepulchre, and dispos d some Guard about it, in whom the could confide, to prevent him from getting out. As foon as he was recover'd from his Lethargy he made an hideous noise and desir'd to be releas'd, but was answer'd, The State had no farther Occasion for him, since another was now promoted to bis Place; he reply'd, He was not at all concern'd at that, he only begg'd em to deliver him out of that noisom Place, and com fine him to a Monastery if they thought fil, where he might end his Days in Peace; the Soldiers were deaf to all his Lamentations, so that he dy'd in that horrible Restraint, having been first constrain d. through Hunger, to devour one of his Arms, before his Dath. Some, I know, give another Account His Death, of this Emperor's End, tho' they all agree in this that it was violent; and Ariadne's Carriage after his Death, especially her great Care in promoting his Successor, and marrying him speedily upon it, leave no room to doubt what a large share she had in it. . it addelgoser at ve birronde bus Bright selle Wice, frew regulary of Chapley or Mr.

C

fey

fen

for cal

ed

wi int in

SIG

200 ma

tio

QU

cu

tu

hi

C ftı

de

fo

ta

fo

m

fe

PI

fe

E

P

Chapily. LIM Zeno, Augustulus.

All this while the Siege continu'd before Clermont, but this Year, after the Beliegers had made feyeral Breaches in the Wall, and most of the Dofendants were deftroy'd, either by the Swo door fome other Accidents, too obvious upon those Occations, Ecdicine, in Despair of any Succour, yielded it up; and being fent for by Nepas, was honour d with the Dignity of Patrician, and Orestes was sent into Gant to succeed in the Command of the Troops in those Parts line I sid you on bivone of moundards This Oreftes was by Birth a Gorb, and having acquir'd a great Reputation in the Wars, he was made General of the Auxiliary Forces of that Nat tion in Italy. He had upon all Occasions appear'd very vigorous in his Service to the Empire, and was therefore entruited at this time with an Almyuto watch Enrich in Gaul, and be a Curb to his ambitious Practices. But this Barbarian infread of executing his Commission like a Man of Honour, turn'd his Arms against his Master, and besieg'd him in Rayenna, He knew Nepos was in a weak Orestes ex-Condition, and could eafily be suppress'd, having pels Nepos, stripp'd himself of those Troops that should have defended him, and committed em to his Conduct; fo that Nepar finding himfelf unable to reful him. fled to Salone in Dalmatia, where he was cheertain'd by the Bishop Glycerius, whom the Year before he had deptiv'd of the Empire, whill Oniftes, meeting with none ftrong enough to oppose him, feiz'd on the Imperial Power, and made the Army proclaim his Son dugustulus Emperor allinus we and profed the Title, rather than Power of the Western claims bis Empire bandy'd from one so another, and the im- fulus Emperial Dignity tofsid from Hand to Hand without peror. any Reverence or Respect, by those Brokers of Majesty, who adorn'd their Creatures with the Purple, to first upon the Stage for fome time, and as B b 4

375 A.D. 475.

C

gi

and

of,

his

hi

hi

ne

M

he

F

to

B

W

G

e

I

af

lo

af

rl

CI

I

foon as they displeas'd 'em thrust 'em off again. We have feen no less than ten appearing upon in within the space of twenty Years, most of whom came to a violent End in their Perfons, and all of 'em in their Dignities, as if Fortune had been angry with those who dar'd to assume the Title, as ter she had been pleas'd to break or remove the Power.

A.D. 476.

Orestes, having by this means comply'd with his Ambition in providing for his Family, endeavourd to establish it by an Alliance with Gensorich, King of the Vandals, the most powerful of all his Neight bours, and took Care to preferve the Roman Territories in Gaul against the Goths, the Burgundians and Franks, who very much encroach'd upon 'em. But all his Precautions were to no purpole, for those of the Nobility who had been obliged by Neper, and espous'd his Interest, disdain'd the Tyranny and Usurpation of a Barbarian, who had dar'd to fer up for himself without their Consents; and if of Necessity they must obey a Stranger, they refolv'd it should be one of their own Choice. Odoacer Whereupon they fent an Invitation to Odoacer, irvited in- King of the Herali, to come to their Affistance, and deliver Italy. Odoacer was well acquainted with Orestes, having serv'd as his Officer in the Wars; he knew the Eastern Empire was distracted with Civil Diffentions, that the West was divided and broken, that the Principal Inhabitants had fix'd their Eyes upon him, and that therefore it would be a madness in him to omit so fair an Opportunity of aggrandifing his Family and gratifying his Ambition, for which reason he was resolved to go whither he was call'd; accordingly he rais'd a very powerful Army confisting of his own Subjects, and fuch of his Neighbours as he had allur'd by fair Promises and hopes of Plunder, In the be-100 ginning to Italy.

Chaperv. Lin Beno, Augustulus.

ginning of the Spring he past'd over the Dannbe and enter'd into Bavaria, where Severin, Bishop of the Country, who was in great Reputation for his Sanctity, came to meet him. Odeacer receiv'd him with a great deal of Respect, and demanded his Bleffing, which the Bishop gave him, and affur'd him of a successful Expedition. From thence Odeacer enter'd into Trent, and fo into the Keroneze, and meeting nothing to oppose him in his March, he proceeded on to Lodi in Liguria, where he understood Orestes expected him with all the Forces, both Horse and Foot, he was able to draw together. Odoacer came up to him, and gave him Battel, defeated and forc'd him to fly into Pavia, with those Troops that stuck by him; for the Goths forfook him in the Engagement, because he had not divided the third Part of the Land among em, as he had formerly promis'd. With these Troops he enter'd the Town, thinking to make it. good against Odoacer, because it was well fortify'd, and fecur'd with a good Garrison; but Odeacer follow'd close after him, laid Siege to the Place, and, after some vigorous Assaults, took it by Force, and expos'd it to the Pillage of his Soldiers, who destroy'd all with Fire and Sword. Epiphanius, the renown'd Bishop of the Place, with much difficulty prevail'd to have his Sifter and some of the best Ladies in the Town exempted from the Outrage of the infolent Soldiers, a Favour he bought at the Expence of almost all he was worth. Here Odoacer was faluted King of Italy, on the 29th of Angust, a Title which at once satisfy'd and made him proud. From Pavia he march'd to Placentia, which open'd her Gates to him, where he put Orestes to Slays Ore-Death, in the Presence, and amidst the Acdama- fles. tions of the Victorious Army. After this he proceeded to Ravenna, which he took by Compositiguffulus.

Lespire.

On.

on, and flew Pant, the Brother of Oreftes, whom he had left Governor in the Town. Hearing gustules had fled for Security to Rome, He direct his March with an Intent to Befrege the City, to king in all the Towns in his way, fome of which were force to furrender, and others voluntarily submitted to his Government; as he drew near to Rome all the Inhabitants of the City, who expected again to be pillag'd, as they had been feveral times before, went out to meet him, and received him with Acclamations as their Lord and Soveraign. Augustulus, seeing it in vain to contend, threw of gustulus.

thrones Au the Imperial Purple, and implor'd the Grace of the Conqueror, who gave him his Life, and confind him to Lacullanum, a Castle in Campania. 1011

Empire.

The End of In Angustulus fell the very Name of an Empire the Western in the West. Britain had long fince been quitted by the Romans; Spain was divided among the Goths, Suevi, Alans, and the like; Africk was polfels'd by the Vandals; the Goths, Burgundians and Franks, had erected their feveral Tetrarchies in Ganl, and now at last haly it felf, that for some Ages had triumph'd over the rest of the World became enflav'd to a Barbarian King; and Rome, which was once the Capital of a large and flourishing Empire, is made the Member of a petty Kingd to have his Silker and land of the mob

And as there was this thorough Change in the State, fo was there almost as great an Alteration in the Church, and the Purity of Religion fuffer'd little lefs than a total Eclipse, when the Majesty of the Empire was expiring; for as on one fide Irrele gion and Prophanenels naturally spring out of War and Confusion, fo of the other all the Christian World was at prefent under the Dominion either of Heathen or Heretical Princes. The Kings of Perfia, and of the Franks were Heathens; in the East

W

in

ai

lo

th

C

Pit

if

E

I

b

was reigning either Bafilifens, an Arian, or Zano, a debauch d. dissolute Ensythian. All Africk was in the Possession of Genjerich, an obstinate Arian, and a cruel Persecutor of the Catholick Christians. Exercit was of the like Temper in Ganl. Odeacer in Italy, and the Kings in Spain were as zealous Asserters of the same damnable Heresie. So that from these Considerations we may reasonably conclude, at required the same Almighty Power to preserve the Christian Faith pure and undefiled as it did at first to establish it; nor are we to wonder if, in that long Night of Ignorance and Error, the Enemy took the Advantage of Sowing his Tare among the good Seed, which in succeeding Ages brought forth to plentiful an Harvest.

Š

i.

1

Odoacer continu'd for some time at Rome, where he assumed the Sovereign Power and Absolute Dominion, which however he us'd with much Moderation, for he refus'd the Purple, and other Imperial Ornaments, contenting himself with the Marks of Royaley. He diligently apply d himself to the Settlement of Affairs in his new Kingdom, and the Security of his late Conquosts; for this Reason he courted the Friendship of the Garbs, which Orestes had call'd in to his Affairnce, assigning em a third Part of the Lands in Italy, which he had promis'd em; for the present he set aside the Dignity of Coulus in Rome, because they seem dro assume too great and unleasonable a Power; and that his Subjects might be induced both to fear and respect him, he gave em some publick Examples of his Justice and Severity. When he had disposed of all things according to his Will and Pleasure at Rome, he went and settl'd at Ravenna, where he usually kept his Court.

From this time forward we hardly meet with the yery Shadow of the ancient Remon Greatness which

but

bu ho

ri

2

m

th

to us

O

in bo

ga

fu

la

of

te

th

which as it exceeded all that ever went before it, fo has it been equall'd by none fince. The various Fortunes of this mighty State afford our Thoughts a Prospect full of Admiration and Curiofity, when ther we consider it in its Birth, in its Establishment, or Diffolution; for certainly no People ever experienc'd fo many Forms of Government. and yet flourish'd with equal Vigour in em all. Such Changes and Revolutions, as like Earthquakes would have torn up other Nations, made them the stronger; and Difficulties, that would have weigh'd down and dissolv'd other Governments, render'd them the more invincible. Their Greatness, at which the rest of the World stood amaz'd, was in few respects accidental, in most essential, and their Rife, as well as Fall, was owing not fo much to Fortune as themselves. From a Pack of loofe Vagabonds and wand'ring Shepherds, they form'd themselves, by degrees, into a Civil Society, and before they knew what Law and Government mean'd learn'd to obey, first a Succession of Kings, different in their Tempers, and contradictory in their Maxims; the gentle Dispensation of a Legal Monarchy grew, by degrees, corrupted to an unbounded Tyranny; and that on a fudden was foften'd into the Freedom of a Common-wealth; and yet in all these Revolutions they push'd on without Intermission, to that which from the beginning they feem'd to have in view, the Univerfal Empire. That Maxim, which compares different Forms of Government to different Climates, and supposes this agreeable to one Nation, and that to another, would not have held with them; for they who were one Day to be the Commanders of the whole World, ought to have a Genius as extensive as their Dominions. Their Power became more enlarg'd abroad under the Imperial Dignity, no may but then by degrees they grew more enflav'd at home, and their Greatness being arriv'd at its Meridian shone with too intense a Heat, and foretold a Declension; which however proceeded not so much from the Depravity of the People in general, as from the Luxury, Sloth, Pride and Ambition of their Emperors; some of whom holding the Reins too straight, others too remiss, are an Instance to us how much the Welfare of a Nation depends upon the Dispositions of its Prince, whose Heart is in the Hand of Providence, the great Ruler of the Universe.

This great Revolution in the West happen'd about 522 Years after the Battel of Pharsalia, which gave a Beginning to the Empire; 501 after the sull Settlement of it under Augustus; 380 after the last of the twelve Cesars; 146 after the Removal of the Imperial Seat to Byzantium; about 101 after the Admission of the Goths into Thrace; 66 from the first Captivity of Rome; and 476 after the Nativity of our Saviour.

the then by degrees they green more control and home, and their Creatacts being arrive at the Mernd at those with too intented if an and ton cit a Decision ; which however proceeded not auch from the Depayity of the Papie in getter. is from the Luxury Stoch, Packand Ambinon of their Lipperores found in a condition of the lipperore to the Hand of the Community of the Land o The group Revolution in the Wift Lapperd as bunt got Wears but the Bares of Pharjain, which gave a Bromen o to the Lount y sor stier et e in Settleto or or in tader of was 550 attention bill of the twelve Cefair; inspire the Romoval of the Importations to Browning . Sout 101 alter the Admitten of the both med Thrases 66 from The College of the Company of the College of the Co The state of the s THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE The second second 1417 1417

1780

5.

700

.14

A

3.8

138

N'D ELK.

His greet Services in Gaul, 336.

Fruitrates the Deline of Artile Relieves Medice, 3.1. Shrin is trabenal at blesmanning or no

Valentinian's Orden,

Valentinian's Orden,

Valentinian's Orden,

Sich broug it the Course of theod

Tus, 222 Marghes 1820 Greece, 230

Prepares to invade Italy, 257. Befige.
Honorius Laquaning and AOd by Stilleno at Pollentia, 251. And at Verona, 262.

Men and Matters

Accommodation, which is refused, 285.
Enters Ital LH. TLAN Tiege to Rouge and railes it, 287. Enters Rome, 291.

10

Had SaT OF Red Y.

Alans fix in Sprin, A. A. Strate Thrace, 157

ar Confentia,

A Cacius, Bishop of Amida, his extraordinary Charity, Page 209 Adaultus, Brother to Alarich, defeated in Italy, 289. Made King of the Goths, 297. Marrier Placidia, Sister to Honorius, ibid. Makes Attalus Emperor a secand time, 301. Uslain by his own Subjects, Attalus espouses the Interest of John the Usurper, furper, 313. Recon	ild to Placidia ore Imposes upon her, 316	Fights Boniface

319. His great Serv	vices in Gaul. 226
332. Frustrates the	Designs of Astila
339. Relieves Ofica	nce. 241 Slain by Valentinian's Order
Africk conquer'd by the	Vandale 200
Alarich brought the Got	hsto allet Theodo fius, 223. Marches	into Greece and Prepares to invade It	alv. 257 Refieres Honorius, 260, 11 %	defeated by Stilicho at Pollentia, 261.
Makes a Peace wit
Raifes new Troubles	1876 90 Face on Accommodation, while
Enters Italy, 286. Th	A COLOR OF THE STATE OF THE STA and raises it, 287.
Makes Attalus Emper
grades him, 293.	Takes Rome 300
Forc'd on Shoar by a T	empet and Dies at Consentia,
Alans fix in Spain,	297
Alavivus leads the Goth
Begins a War upon the	Empire A 17
Aliso his bold Attempt,	Sample of 3 Ambrose, Bishop of Mil	an his Forballie to
the Usurper Maximus,	ACT His Douth
244. His Doctrinal	Farare wihid
Amida besieg'd by Sapor,	Takow 18
Ammianus Marcellinus.	the Historian his narrow Escape out of	A mida Amphilochius, Bishop of	Iconium hie for Timpimocinus, Dijoop of	sonable
100 100	Junable

Sonable Answer to Theodosius the Great, Andragathius murders Gratian, 199. Is made Admiral of the Usurper Maximus bis Fleet, 210. Drowns himself, 211 Annibalianus made Governor of Cappadocia and Armenia the Lefs, 5. Slain by Con-Stantius. Anthemius, chief Minister of State during the Minority of Theodosius the Tounger, 275 Anthemius, Emperor of the West, 359. His Death. Antiochians offend Julian, 74. Raife a Se-Antoninus injur'd at Court flies to Sapor, 45 Apodemius instrumental in the Death of Gallus, 24. Putto Death by Julian, 67 Apollo, bis Templenear Antioch burnt, 76 Arbetio fent against the Germans, 27. Defeated by em, 28. A corrupt Judge, 49. Prowok'd by Procopius, 113. Adheres to Valens, Arbogaftes procures Valentinian II. to be murder'd, 220. Kills himself, 226 Arcadius declar'd Emperor, 196. Marries Eudoxia, 235. His Remissness, 246. Per-Secutes St. Chrysoftome, 264. Dies, 274 Arintheus sent to assist the Armenians, 132. Prevents the King of Perfix Defigns, 133 Arlaces, King of Armenia, alifts Julian in his Wars against the Persians, 79. Deserted by Jovian, 93. He is murder d by Sapor, 130 Arie-

n

e

3

7

7.

2

P

6, d.

8

is 9

4-le

INDBX.

Arlenius made Tutor to Accadino, 196. Retires into Egypt, 197 Artabanes, deferting the King of Perhas Service, 131. Is kill'd by Paras, 133 My Affembly of Thieves, 335 Aspar Seizes on the Usarper John, 314. Die feated in Africk, 319. Slain with his Sons, Athanarich over-power'd by the Hungs, Mills bimfelf. 167
Alls bimfelf. Athanalium, biffin of Alexandria bunift d. 3.
Highly esteem'd by Jovian, 100 Attalus made Emperor by Alarich, 291. Degraded, 293. Once more made Emperor by Adolph, 301. Taken, 302. And con-find to the Island of Lipute, 303 Attila mondes the Empire, 328 Sells a Peace to Theodofius, 331. Breaks das again, 339. Invades Gaul, 339. Br-Sieges Orleance, 340. Engages Atius, and is overthrown, 3411 Enters Italy, 343. Takes Aquileia, 344. His death, 346 Augustulus proclaim'd Emperor, 3754 Dethron'd, Avitus made Emperor in Gaul, 353. Dethron'd by the People at Rome, 354 В
Barbatio Cent to different Calling at On Barbatio sent to dispatch Gallus, 24. Opposes Julian, 38. Beheaded, 44 Bonisace Governor of Africk, 310. Sent against the Barbarians in Spain, ibid. Defeats feats Caltinus, 315. Deceived by Etius, nabels, 316. Calls the Vandals into Africk, 317. And endageours in wait to fend em back, 318. Returns into Italy, 316. Challenges Etius, ibid. Thies, 829. Britains rabel, and fet up a new Emperor, 679.

9

3

a

1

٨

5,

,

6

.

9

Token and beant soline, sibid. Castinus fent with Boniface into Spain 310. Defeated by the Vandals, 919. Mode General by John she Usanger, 313. Taken Profoner in Africk, Chalcedon befreg'd by Valens Chrysostome, Stabis Christian Courage, 253. Parfecuted, 269. Dies, 266 Chaiftians perfecuted by Julian, 70 Church, the State of it in Constantius his Reign, 56. In that of Valence 119. Oppress'd by the Denacists, in Africk, 270. Depress diby the Gother 368 Confians created Colar, 4. His Share at the Division of the Empire, 8. His Wars in Gauls 19. Murder d by Gaifo, 10 Confermine the Great dedicates Confentinople, a. Delivers the Sarmata, 3. Divides the Government of the Empires 4. Is baptiz'd, 5. Dies, Constantine, junior, made Governor in Gaul, Sec. A Slain near Aquileia, Constantine ofurps in Britain, 272. His Cc 3 Pro-

Progress in Gaul, 277. Made Partner in the Empire by Honorius, 288. But acts against him, 298. And is put to death, Conftantina marry'd to Gallus, 14. Her extravagant Behaviour, 19. Her Death, 23 Constantius marry'd to Eusebia, 4. Murders his Relations, 8. Creates Gallus, Cæfar, 14. Overthrows Magnentius, 15. Refolves to destroy Gallus, 23. Grows Cruel and Jealous, 25. His Vanity, 27. Defeats the Germans, 28. His Ingratitude, 31. Makes Julian, Cæfar, 33. Takes a Progress to Rome, 36. Marches against the Quadi, 41. And Suppresses em, 42. Enters Sirmium in Triumph, 44. Grows Jealous of Julian, 50. Protects the Arians, 57: Marches against Julian, 62. Baptiz'd at Antioch, 63. His 64 Death. Constantius, a Noble Roman, 298. Made Lieutenant-General by Honorius, ibid. Grants a Peace to the Burgundians, 301. Marries Placidia, 303. Declar'd Augustus, 306. Dies at Ravenna, bid. Courtiers, their Ambitious Practices, 18 Cylaces Deferting the Persians, 131, Is

Cyrill, Bishop of Alexandria, 304. Justly

Condemn'd, 305. Procures the third General Council to be Summon'd at Ephesus, 322. Accus'd to the Emperor, 323. Imprison'd murder'd by Paras,

and releas'd,

E

123

324

E

Dagalaiphus mian, 103	his bold Anfo	ver to Valenti-made Cæl	or, ibid. He is	rus, 4. And is murder d, 8 Gallus,		Procurement of 21
611	Trans.	dolius II. 307.
Her Ingra	titude, 332.	Goes to Jerusa- 336 nto Italy, 351.
Is led into	Africk,	12 83 80 352
Engages T	heodofius, 224.	Defeated, 225. 226 Eusebia mari	y'd to Constan	tius, 4. Per-
Her Pract	tices upon Hel	ena, 37. Her Urficinus,	49. Punish'd	with Death by Eutropius opp	oses Rufinus,	233. Succeeds His treacherous Practices,	241. Put to	Death, 250
Firmus revol	ts in Africk,	142. Submits bimself to	the Roman Ger	neral, 143. His Treachery.

Treacher	y, 144. 1	He flies, 14	6. Hang	3
Flavian, L	Dan of An	einte and	L. Lie i	7
The same of the sa	with The	TO SHAPE WHEN YOU SHOULD BE SHOWN	CVAZBERNO CROED NOTE	50000
Fritigern,		Company of the Compan	TO SHEET WAS A SHEET OF THE SECOND OF	250,3400
His Poor	Advice,	4 7	Dolor	2
40, 199, 199	and the second	W. W. W.	a nation	送
14	(3	Media d
Gabinius,
murder'a	by the Ro	mans,	. 14	.8
Games, a	The same of the sa	10 (3) TES You CARE TO THE COMPANY OF	Action of the Contract of the 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	Ruffnust		THE RESERVE OF THE PERSON OF T
and the second	tent, 245.	The second secon 6. His T
follome.	253. Hi	s Defens	noon Con	1 de frastrat
071		All the same of	25
Gaile mire	ders Conft	m's,	illi saudi	0
Gallus crea	tted Cæfar	, 14. A	s extruous baviour, 1	AND THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF	The second second second	6.4
	riage at Co	1000	A REPORT OF THE PARTY OF THE PA	. 411
	eath,
Gauls, the	ir desperat	Attemb	at Amid	7 2 Magazzine		an filosien	weer colu	7
Genferich	all aby Bot	niface into	Africk by	1.
Gonquers	the Countr	y, 348.	Takes Hip	D-Po, 319.	Breaks 1	be Peace,	226. H	is Cruelties	, 327. Co	ncludes a	Peace wit	b Wie Emp	eror, 330.	Jacks K	ome, 35	ı.
Fits Fin	atical Expo	वानुभवना ३५	George
		4)	George	5

George, the Arian Bishap, his Character, 75 Gildo serves the Romans against his Bro-ther, 142. Revolts, 242. Murders his Brother's Sons, 243. Oversbrown, 250. Strangles bimlelf Godegifil, King of the Vandals, Invades the Empire, 271. Settles in Spain, 277 Goths, effifting Procopius, are punished by Valens, 121. Beg leave to be admitted into Thrace, 167. Defeat the Romans, 172. Besiege Adrianople, 173. Cut off 4 Roman Legion, 175. Querthrow Valens, 181. Destroy d in the East, 188 Gratian, Son of Valentinian, declar 4 Augustus, 125. Sends some fiorces to the Assistance of Valens, 174. Deseats the Germans, 176. Marches into the East, 177. Makes Theodosius his Partner in the Empire, 190. Slain by Andragathiis created Helens marry'd to Julian, 33. Circumiven-Hemelian Commands for Honorius in A-frick, 291. Defents the Enemy, 292. Ufwas, and is kill da Leclar d Emperor, 222 Mar-19 Stilicho's Dangbier, 225, Be-Stilleho Walte Malte 260. Rehea'd takes Peace with Alarich 263 Marses has first Waters larich 263 Marses has first Waters 281.

281 Ordershim to be put to Death, 189 Rejects Alarich's Propofals of a Peace 285. Makes Constantine his Afforiate in the Empire, 288: Besieg'd in Ravenna, 291. Makes War upon the Barbarians in Spain, 370. His Death, was all 372 Hunns Invade the Empire, 328 Hypatia, Daughter of Theon, a Philoso pher, maffacred in an Uproar, 305 John Usurps in the West, 312. Taken Pri-Soner, 314. Beheaded, 315 Jovian elected Emperor, 901 Concludes a Peace with the Persians, 93. Found dead in his Chamber, Isauri their Inroads into the Empire, 20. Their Depredations, Isdegerdes made Guardian to Theodosius the Second, 274 Julian, the Apostate, created Calar, 33. Exploits in Gaul, 34. His Progress there, 37. His Victory at Argentoratum, 39. Declar'd Emperor by the mutinous Army, 52. Prepares to march against Constantius, 58. His Speech to the Army, 59. Enters Sirmium, 61. His Reformations after the Death of Constantius, 68. He opens the Heathen Temples, 69. Oppreffes the Christians, 70. Begins his Expedition against the Persians, 72. An Instance of his Justice, 73.

Quarrels

IN DUE X

Quarrels with the Inhabit ants of Antioch, 74. Endeavours to Re-build the Temple at Jerusalem, 77. His Progres, 78. His Order of Marching, 80. His Success, 82. He is in great Danger, 83. His Obstinacy and Rashness, 84. He Defeats the Persians, 85. He is wounded, 86. And dies, Julius puts all the Goths to Death in the East, Lampadius his bold Saving in the Senate, 279 Leo Elected Emperor at Constantinople, 355. Puts Aspar and his Sons to Death, Marries his Daughter to Zeno 1fauricus, 369. His Death, Libanius, the Sophist, Julian's Instructor in the Pagan Superstitions, 70. His Blasphemy, Limigantes, Sarmatæ, their Obstinacy, 42. Punish'd by the Emperor Constantius, 43 Lupicinus his corrupt Practices in Thrace pernicious to the Empire, Property of the special of the sections Magi, their Religious Artifices, 275 Magnentius Rebels in Gaul, 10. His Cruelty, 11. Overthrown, 15. Kills bim-Colf, Majorianus declar'd Emperor of the West, 355. Defeats the Vandals, 356. Murder d by Ricimer, 258

Martian declar'd Emperor in the East. 27. Summans the fourth general Council, 338. His Death, 255 Maximus the Philasopher and Magician, 72. Put to Death, Maximus Usurps in Britain, 197. His Cruelty, 200. And Policy, 208. Enters Italy, 209. Defeated and Beheaded, Maximus, see Petronius.
Mazezil opposes his Brother Gildo in A- frick, 243. Drown'd by Stilicho's Pro- curement, 251 Monks raife Disturbance in Alexandria 304 Mutinies in Gaul in the East, 91. At Ti- cinum, 281 Nepas Julius declar'd Emperer in the West, 371. Expelled by Orestes, 375 Nepotianus sets up for himself, and is Slain, Nestorius, Bishap of Constantinople, his Heresie, 321. Condemn'd in the Council at Ephesus, 323. His miserable End, 324 Nigrinus his Loyalty to Constantius, 62.
A special managed on the second secon Odoacer invited into Italy, 376. Slave O- reftes, 377. Makes himfelf be declar'd King of Italy, 379 Olybrius, Emperor in the West, Olympius

Ol Pa

DN DEX

Olympius practises against Stilicho, 281.
After some Services dismiss'd from Court, 189 Orestee Rebebs in the West, 375. Slain by Odoacer, 277
The state of the second Paras, King of Armenia, 132. Deftroys his two Friends at the Instigation of Sa-por, King of Perlia, 133. Detain'd Pri-foner by the Romans, 151. Escapes into Armenia, and is treacherously murder'd, 152,153
Peter, firnam'd the Fuller, his Herefie and Insolence, & sequ.
Petronius Maximus murders Valentinian the Third, 348. Usurps the Empire, 349.
the is flam, 351 Placedia, Flonorius his Sifter, marry de so Adolph, King of the Goths, 197. And ta Constantine, 303. Retires to Con-fantinople, 311. Made Regent of the Empire 345 Her Death; 335 Procopius conceals kimself after the Death of Julian, 98, Lymps, 109. Takes Cy-excus, 112. Grows Insulent, 113. Token and Robendod.
Promotus defeats the Gruthingi, 204. Made General of the Foot by Theodolius, 209.
Rescues the Emperor, 218. He is murder'd, Pulcheria perfuades Theodolius to Marry, 307. Forc'd to retine from Court, 333.
au Marrian, 337

Radagaisus invades Italy, 268. Defeated, 269. And slain, 270 Rando, a noble German, seizes on Ments, 134 Remigius bis corrupt Practices, 127, 142 Ricimer, a Goth, made General of the Roman Army, 355. Kills Majorianus the Rando, a noble German, seizes on Ments, Remigius bis corrupt Practices, 127, 142 Ricimer, a Goth, made General of the Roman Army, 355. Kills Majorianus the Rando, a noble German, Jeizes on Ments, 134 Remigius his corrupt Practices, 127, 142 Ricimer, a Goth, made General of the Roman Army, 355. Kills Majorianus the Remigius his corrupt Practices, 127, 142 Ricimer, a Goth, made General of the Ro- man Army, 355. Kills Majorianus the man Army, 355. Kills Majorianus the Emperor, 357. Besieges Rome, 365.
Kills Anthemius, 366. And dies, ibid.
Romanus tyrannically governs in Africk, 126. His Policy, 129 Rome overflown by the Tiber, 151. Imitates the Gothick Fashions, 243. Befieg'd by Alarich, 287. Taken by him, 293. And by Genferich, 351 Rufinus his great Interest at Court, 219.
Made Tutor to Arcadius, 223. His Ambition, 232. Renders himself odious to Treachery, 235. His Cruelty, 234. And Treachery, 235. Slain, 238
$
Sabinianus, a decrepit old Man, made General of the Roman Army, 44

Sabinus,

Sabirus, bis bold Reflection, 99	1 Saluft made Prafect of Gaul, 60. His good Advice to Julian, 79. Refuses the Em	- pire,	9
Sapor, King of Persia, Besieges Nisibis, 9 His Wars with Constantius, 44. Be sieges Amida, 46. Takes it, 48. Con	- cludes a Peace with Jovian, 93. Invade.	5 Armenia, 130. His Artifice, 13:	2
Saracens converted to the Christian Faith 186. A strange Action of a Saracen, 18	7
Sarus receiv'd into the Roman Service, 268 His Exploits in Gaul, 276. Acts again	7
Stilicho, 282. Prevents an Accommoda	- tion between Honorius and Alarich, 29 Sebastian a Commander in Julian's Army, 79 Defeats the Goths,
Sedition at Rome, 120. At Constantino	- ple, 194. At Antioch, 205. At Alex	-
- andria, and I am 213,30	3
Severus declar d Emperor at Ravenna, 357	1.
Slain by Ricimer
Stilicho made a General in the Roman Ar	200 my, 223. His Ambition, 232. Marrie	12500 bis Daughter to the Emperor Honorius 235. Marches into the East, 237. Hi	5 Exploits in Rhætia, 260. He relieve Honorius, ibid. Defeats Alarich, 261 His Policy, 262. Procures a Peace be	- tween Alarich and Honorius, 263. De	- feats Radagaifus, 269. Rewarded by th	2 Romans, 270. His Power in the Se
nate	,

d, 0 s, 4 2

nate, 279. Put to Lieuth, Suevi settle in Spain, Sylvanus fent into Gaul, 28. Sets up for Emperor, 29. Murder'd, Sylvanus, an Advocate, his confident Reflection, 97 Thalastius bis imprudent Behaviour, 19. Renounces Christianity, and is reconciled to Julian, 72
Themistius in Favour with Julian, 70 Theodosius, senior, fent into Britain, 124.
His prudent Management, 124. Sept against the Moors in Africk, 142. Ha-Zards his Army, 145. His Victory, 146.
Put to Death, Theodolius the Great declar'd Emperor by Gratian, 190. His Vertue, 193. His exemplary Justices 194. Summons the second General Council, 196. His remarkable Saying, 197. Summons enother Council, 201. Concludes a Peace with the Persians, 202. His Clemency, 207.
His Proceedings against Maximus, 209.
Conquers him, 211. His great Moderation, 212. Shutsup the Heathen Temples in Rome, 213. Reforms some Abuses there are His Emploite in Manda there, 215. His Exploits in Macedonia, 216. In great Danger, 218. His Proceedings against Eugenius, 223. Defeats him, 225. Falls fick, 227. His Death, and Character, 228. A great Instance

Theodolius, junior, technid Augustus by bis Father, 263. Marries Achonais, 207. His Wars in Persia, 208. Buys a Peace of the Hunns, 231. Displeus'd with his Sister Pulcheria, 332. And his Wife, 334. His Death, 336. Tribigild rebels, 245. Loses his Army, 148.

V

Valens declar'd Emperor by his Brother Valentinian, 103. Displeases his Subjects, 107. His Cowardice, 110. Success against Procopius, 114, 115. His great Severity, 116. A Friend to the Arians, 120. Wars against the Goths, 121. His Tyranny, 136. Admits the Goths into Thrace, 168. Engages with the Goths, 181. Defeated and flain, 182. His Character. Valentinian I. elected Emperor, 101. His Speech to the Army, 102. Affociates his Brother in the Empire, 103. His generous Resolution, 105. Makes his Son Gratian Augustus, 125. His Cruelty, 126. His Exploits in Germany, 134) 135. His Expedition againg the Quadi, 155. His Death, 158. And Character. Valentinian II. declar'd Emperor, 162. Flies to Theodosius, 209. Murder'd, 221 Valentinian III. made Emperor, 315. Marry'd to Eudoxia, 325. Ravifes the W	Æ of Maximus, 347. Is flain,	40000 Valentine, his great Service against Trib	2005/07

gild,	7
Vandals conquer Africk,	8
77 . 1 . C . 1 . 1	-3
Veteranio sets up for himself, 12. D Ursicinus sent into Gaul, 29. Procur	3.00 Sylvanus to be murder'd, 31. Recall from his Command, 44. Opposed by S. binianus, 47. Accus d at Court, 49. H
Tofana	0

7

Zeno kills A	spar and his	Sons. 262.	Marry'd to Lee	s's Daughter,	369. Ma	de Emperor in th	e East, 372.	Flies int	o Isau-
ria,			374
Zozimus his	great Partia	lity,	191

FINIS.

